Tuesday Night

Dear George,

It has been very beautiful today, one can hardly help feeling in a good mood. Even I felt comparatively good today. Certainly, much better than I felt yesterday. I find that every time that business is slack I start thinking too much, and always melancholy thoughts. I'll snap out of it.

I felt quite bitter about the meager salary that Musicraft is paying me, and I guess I still think that I am underpaid; but I think that what is really disturbing me most is the fact Aaron is really the big boss and I am his stooge. It isn't exactly like that; but somehow deep down I guess that I feel slighted. This will soon be changed and I think that I will feel much different about everything involved then.

I think that the biggest factor in my feeling ~~as~~ I did yesterday was the realization of the fact that this is no child's play; but that it is the ~~real~~ thing. I have to get used to the fact that I am up in the world, and live up to it. Don't ~~tt~~ think that I am proud of the letter that I sent you yesterday; I'm not. It definitely showed what a weak backbone I have. I must admit that the whole thing scares me a little. ^{well} This should prove to be a big factor in the molding of my whole life; and I am sure that I will come out all the better for it. I really could use a substantial raise; but I am sure that after Aaron's departure I will save more than I do now.

In any event I realize that the letter I wrote yesterday was no credit to me, and I don't ever expect it to happen again. So bear with me a little longer and I think that every thing will turn out all right.

Typing quite well, that is I am going quite fast. I expect to take a driving lesson to-morrow. I don't think that it will take me long to learn to drive. I may be able to pick up Aaron's car in a few weeks. He expects to trade it in for a different one. His car, except for a couple of tires and a few minor things is in pretty good shape, and if I can pick it up for a fair price I think that I can get a good bargain. At least I would know that there is nothing wrong so radically that it would incur my spending a lot of money to fix it.

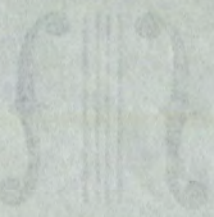

I may be in to N.Y. this week, so possibly I will see you sooner than you expected. If I do come in, I hope that you will be available for a long discourse. There are many things on my mind that you could help me with. I only hope that I can think of all the things I want to talk to you about.

In any event, I am feeling much better today, and I know that everything will turn out O.K.

With a handshake in mind,

Regards to Ho.

Bob.
