Thursday: 10¹⁵ P.M.

Another day has passed into pasternity, my sweet, and ere we both will realize it we will be together again. Your absence has conclusively convinced what a useless life any person lives, unless he loves someone, is willing to sacrifice something for that person or persons, and is prepared at all times to give a little more than he receives. Your being away from me has given me a clearer understanding of what living life in a full sense means. Only making other people happy. And believe me, my precious one, the days that I will make you unhappy are all in the past. From now on a new deal, a rebirth of the old ideal - "and to do good is my religion". Thomas Paine said that among other things, and it has always been my substitute for the hypocrisy of blind faith - so, darling, be happy, look happy - and I shall dream of you to-mite, as I always like to remember you, the mischievous pretty little lady, with the sparkle of the devil in her eyes -

The weather is getting warmer, the sun is quite strong, and there has been little rain this week - I hope you get a break in the weather real soon - so that you can take that car of yours. Awfully glad that your ear and cold have cleared up (have they?) and that Liesel is devoting so much time to you - Don't tire yourself, and eat plenty of vegetables and drink all the milk you can get. How is the food? Do you like the crew? Is Al doing any business at all? Sorry those two small people can't see eye to eye on things - but I guess all will adjust itself when they are economically set.

Whitman is having a time of it at present. His father had ~~a~~ another stroke on Tuesday and is in the hospital - his mother slips in and out of a coma daily - In this their 50th year of married life it seems to be a race between who will first board the "Heavenly Express". They are both booked for passage - For Murray, I feel sorry for him - Introduced Jules to my milk bar to-day - He sends his regards - Will dine with them on Wednesday - Danny, my mother and father are all well and send their kindest regards.

No mail to-day - market is quiet - I feel fine and dandy (played basketball to-nite and beat these guys 3 games losing none) - ate lightly, and am prepared to go to bed, with the hope that I will dream of my dearest, sweetest sweetheart. So until to-morrow, you find me, your faithful as ever,

J. J.
