Florence, Sweetheart:

Your Sunday and Monday letters arrived to-day, and so vivid are your description of the place and current events that I feel as though I was present with you. I am most happy to learn that you are eating well, getting plenty of sun, and generally having a lovely time. You needed this form of relaxation very much at this time, and I hope you get plenty of it. As you suggested, and I fully agree with you, when I come home from the war, we will definitely locate in the country, so that this kind of life will be ours always.

I am visiting St. Paul to-night, as one of the boys desires to become a Mason, and I am steering him along. The annual report you sent to Camp Planché arrived to-day, and thanks. Don't worry about the facts getting mixed these days, and carrying on in the country. We are learning to be happy the hard way, and I believe it will last longer and be more beautiful than these lashes can ever hope it could be.

I have no idea whether or not we can obtain a carriage, but I have every reason to believe that we will find one, so don't worry on that score. Rooms will be a problem too, but I have made friends, and that will be solved before you get here. Just be certain to advise when you expect to arrive, and the sooner I know the closer the solution to all problems will be.

My letter is short to-night, as the young man awaits me, but long or short, you can always be sure that I love you. Hope you, Jim, Bess, Ed, John Hy, and all the folks are in good health and spirits. With a kiss in mind for you and Jim, you find me impatient, as ever
