Repetition, my love, is habit forming; and habits are a second nature. So I guess having you has already become part of my natural existence. And believe you me I like it. In the same vein, I suppose if you did not receive this letter daily it would also ^{break} the habit you had become accustomed to, which only goes to prove that the things we like to do, we continue doing until the habit is formed. And the same with people, those we like we continue to visit, those who show lack of interest, or whose attitude is one of obligatory benevolence we avoid - And so the world over - it is not our good fortune, dear sweetheart, that we both love each other, making it simple for us to form a mutual habit.

Today was uneventful, but it passed quickly - Market picked up again - I am feeling fine and looking forward with impatience to the July 4th week-end - Abby called to-day and advised that he received a card from you - Wishes to be remembered - Denny and I lunched together, and I had dinner with my parents - after dinner Lena (the Italian lady you met in my mother's house) visited my mother - desiring to show off your pretty home. I drove them over to our place and she was amazed. She had never seen anything like our messag - and was I proud, to say nothing of my mother and father. Lena too sends her regards, and so does Frank the garage man.

I am having the skimming taken out of the car at a very nominal cost. Thought it best, as it would only ruin the tires.

Expect Alice to-morrow morning, and will tell her not to wax the fayer or oil the furniture. So don't worry about anything.

How are you feeling? Are you gaining any weight? How is your back ache? Does your ear annoy you yet? Do you want anything shipped? Have you sent a card to all our friends? Are the Drabners on speaking terms?

Take it very easy, and keep on remembering that only another week remains before we will be together again

As ever
Ag. ☺
