

Friday evening,
March 10th 1944.

George, my darling,

No news from you except a card saying you were going on a business Tuesday. Hope you had nice weather and that you're well. All at home are fine and the folks will be here to-morrow night or Sunday.
Eleanor had dinner with me to-night and then went to the movies. She'll be here again to-morrow and will stay overnight. My mother is still away and Eleanor is a big help when she comes. Hope with Mom and Pop who are well and send their love to you.

Baby and I are having a grand time putting up an album with the old snaps of the years 1920 to 1938. It all seems like such a short time ago when those snaps were taken and I guess a whole lifetime unfolds itself in a few hours when you start gazing through an album. Time goes quickly but at present it seems to be standing still because of this miserable war.

Our family album is next on the list and will be taken care of as soon as possible. No take some more snaps, darling, when you have the chance as you'll be the most important face in our album.

To-day was clean up day, Sarah is still in Virginia, and I don't mind as long as Jimmie plays in his pen or crib. He is still the adorable blonde rascal and teases me every eve by standing on top of the high chair all set to do a swan dive. One of these days he'll fall on his cute nose and you'll probably hear him yell.

Uncle Harry & Mary sent me a letter to day thanking us for the candy and also wants baby and me to visit them soon.

Not too much excitement here and that means relaxation for Mommy. All I look forward to is when you'll be here again with baby and me and happy days again. Gosh, darling, it's so damn long, almost 4 months and soon it'll be $\frac{1}{2}$ a year. Baby is asleep now and I can think about you all evening and how much we love each other.

Good-night, sweet heart, all my love to you and a kiss and hug from Grandma.
As always
