Long, Bitter Winter for Keene Hoop Teams

DOWN AND OUT - Sophomore sensation Maigan Braley's (12) ankle injury will sideline her for the rest of the 1996 season. Keene State is hoping Kerri Martin (14) can help the team salvage a respectable season.

Joy and Cheer Not Part of Lady Owls' Holiday

Paul Silverfarb
The Equinox

There was one item on every NECC team's wish list over the Christmas holiday, to play the Keene State College Lady Owls basketball team.

The combination of key injuries and poor shooting victimized Keene State over the one month span.

The University of Albany went on a 17-4 run in the final 8:16 to secure a victory over the Lady Owls on January 14. The Lady Owls went into the half with a 34-29 lead but came out shooting just 25 percent, with only 14 points. Amy Smith netted 13 points while Kerri Martin had 12 points and 11 rebounds in a losing effort, the final was 62-48.

Outcomes like this have plagued the Lady Owls all season.

While at Spaulding Gymnasium on January 13, Le Moyne College's Emily Anspach reached the 1,000 point milestone while handing the Lady Owls a 59-46 defeat.

Keene State kept it close at the end of the first half with a three point buzzer-beater by Erin Van Nostrand, leaving the Lady Owls down 26-21. This was as close as Keene State got as they went ice cold from the field in the second half, going just 16 for 63.

Van Nostrand finished with 12 points while Lindsay Arnold added eight points and 15 rebounds.

Just one day previous, on January 12, the Lady Owls were handed another defeat, this time off the court. Doctors told sophomore sensation Maigan Braley that she would miss the rest of the regular season. Braley injured her ankle during a losing effort versus the University of Tampa in late December. "She was my best player," said a disappointed Keene State coach Keith Boucher. "It's going to be difficult finding someone to replace her. Hopefully some of the freshman can take advantage of the opportunity and the increased playing time to get the job done."

The Lady Owls didn't have much success during a weekend road trip to Connecticut early in the new year.

In the first of the two road games, Southern Connecticut State University snubbed Keene State, 57-54.

Men's Basketball

Owls Still Looking up at Rest of Conference

Paul Silverfarb
The Equinox

The Keene State College men's basketball team tried to bring home their first NECC victory over the Christmas vacation.

However, Santa was very cruel to Keene State, and made this winter break one they want to forget about, compiling a dismal 1-6 record.

The University of Albany rode into Keene on January 14, and never stopped, driving over Keene State 95-78. The Owl's trailed at the half, 57-32, and couldn't recover, despite point-guard Matt Stone's 22 point effort, and Doug "Roach" Jenkins contribution of 14 points.

The Dolphins of Le Moyne College put on a basketball clinic for the Owls on January 13. With an awesome first-half display of shooting, the Dolphins were 65 percent from the field, while nailing nine of 13 from three point land, leaving the score 61-30. The Owls were unable to claw their way back into the game, eventually losing by the score of 100-77. The only shining spot for the Keene State was Rich Winget, with 15 points and nine rebounds.

The bus ride down to Connecticut on the sixth and seventh of January went smoothly, unlike the games played by the Owls.

The first game of the weekend series paired Keene State against Southern Connecticut State University. Southern Connecticut's Jerri Lewis, Lloyd Bromfield and Jermaine Carter combined for 51 points, sailing to victory over the Owls, 83-53. While Winget poured in another 13 points, Keene State trailed from tip-off to the final buzzer.

The second game provided the same sad result. Keene State suffered this loss at the hands of the University of New Haven, 108-80. The Chargers of New Haven ran to a 48-31 half-time lead, and never looked back.

The Owls defense gave up an astounding 85 shots, allowing 56 to fall through the net.

Keene State competed in the Holiday Inn Express-Stony Brook Men's Basketball Invitational on December 28 and 29. During the first game, SUNY-Old Westbury provided an opening round loss to the Owls, 88-76. Winget poured in a team high 21 points and grabbed a game high 16 rebounds. The second game of the tournament pitted Keene State against University of Southern Maine. Keene State pulled off a nip and tuck affair, prevailing 71-69. Southern Maine tossed up a last second three-point prayer that was not answered. Winget made the all-tournament team with a team high 15 points.

Keene State returns to Spaulding Gymnasium tonight to tip-off against Franklin Pierce College at 7:30 p.m. The Owls are still in a desperate search for NECC victory number one. A hard task against the division's best.

PLEASE... MAYBE - The men's basketball team has thrown up many prayers this year... not many have been answered.

Student Alleges Sexual Assault

Keith Moriarty
The Equinox

A Keene State College student has reported to the Department of Campus Safety that she was sexually assaulted in her residence hall room. The report, which was filed on Thursday, was passed on to the Keene Police Department, said Vernon Baisden, director of Campus Safety.

The student, who asked to remain anonymous for fear of retribution, said she met the alleged assailant about a week and a half prior to the incident. She met him at PAKS Convenience Store on Winchester street and they had a brief conversation, she said in an interview conducted in the Student Center.

The alleged assailant asked the student for her phone number, and then called her a few days later, saying he was a new student, who didn't know many people at Keene State, said the alleged victim.

A week prior to the alleged sexual assault, she said, he called and asked if he could come over, and she said "yes." "He was more physical than I wanted, and I asked him to leave and he did."

Last Wednesday he called her again, and asked to visit. Again, she let him into her room, she said.

It was then that he allegedly sexually assaulted her, and she struck back, she said.

She said she hit him and he left, holding his sweater to his face.

The alleged victim said she lay motionless for a few hours before calling Campus Safety, who in turn notified the Keene Police Department.

She said she felt the Keene Police officer who responded to the incident was condescending to her.

The original officer that spoke with her said she did not seem comfortable talking to a male about the incident, and she was then referred to a female, Patrol Officer Mary Fish.

"He basically just made it seem like I was some stupid girl who was drunk," she said.

She had been drinking that night, but did not feel drunk, she said.

On Friday, when she was getting her mail, she saw the alleged perpetrator in the Student Center.

"He came up to me and said 'I'm sorry, I was drunk,'" she said.

The alleged victim said she felt like it was more of a stalking incident than just "some guy who got too drunk."

She said he seemed to know things about her that he shouldn't have known.

After the incident, on Saturday, he called her room, only said her name and hung up.

"I felt like I was being stalked," she said.

Federal Budget Crisis puts a Wrench in Student Aid Awards

Colleen DeBaise
College Press Service

WASHINGTON—With ever-present government shutdowns and budget talks, it's been a tough year for students and educators to determine the fate of federal financial aid programs.

Direct loans, Pell Grants, AmeriCorps.

At various times in the last few months, the major players on Capitol Hill have debated whether to cancel funding for these and other programs or to expand them.

Some legislators have wanted to cut back on funding; others have argued to leave it as is.

But with the temporary budget deal reached Jan. 25 by the White House and Republican Congressional leaders, government officials have laid out a somewhat grim blueprint for education in the coming year.

Provisions in the House-approved measure that keeps the government running through March 15 include:

- Cutting the funding for AmeriCorps, the national service program in which students earn college money by working in their community, to 75 percent of its 1995 budget.

- Operating the Department of Education, whose budget for 1996 still has not been approved, at 75 percent of its 1995 budget.

- Expanding Pell Grants by $100 to $2,440 for fiscal 1996.

One on One...

Rep. Robert K. Wollner (D-Keene) discusses life as both a Keene State senior and a state representative.

"One on One..." with State Representative Robert K. Wollner

"A lot of people forget why they are there... People would be horrified if they could see what is happening in Concord."

—Rep. Rob Wollner (D-Keene)

Joel Kastner
News Editor

Editor's note: The following is taken from an interview with Keene State senior, and New Hampshire state legislator, Rob Wollner. Wollner, who is serving his first term in the Statehouse, has focused much of his attention on educational issues in New Hampshire. The House recently passed two bills sponsored by Wollner, HB-1160 and HB-1450. Both bills involve expanding state educational services. Wollner, who works part-time in a local restaurant, spends 30 to 40 hours per week in Concord.

What would make a student who works at a restaurant want to make that kind of commitment, in addition to their other responsibilities?

I was approached by Rick Trombly, the Democratic leader in the House. He was looking for a candidate to run for a specific seat in Keene and I lived in the district. I checked my schedule to see if I would have enough time to go to class and be able to afford my rent, while working a part-time job. I also had to be able to make session days and committee work in the legislature.

What do you think made you an attractive candidate to your party?

I think the voters chose me because of my campaigning. I went out every spare chance I had, going door to door. I asked people for their vote, answered any questions people had about me; I told them about myself. A lot of people said I was the first person to come to their house in thirty years. I think that really made a big difference. I won by 38 votes, which in any election is pretty close. I had 52 percent of the votes and my opponent had 48. So, 38 votes, and a four percent made the difference.

What would you say your role in politics was before that?

I've always had my own political views, but nothing I really ever acted on. I was never an activist.

How do you learn the process of legislating?

You learn through trial and error. After you are elected, they do have a three or four day orientation period for freshmen members of the House and Senate where they take you through, give you a tour,

Equinox/JESSE STENBAK

LAWMAKER — Rep. Robert Wollner is serving his first term in the New Hampshire Statehouse, while attending classes at Keene State and working part-time. Wollner is up for election next year.

'this is the governor's office, this is the speakers office, this is the research office, if you need anything, you go to these people. If you want to look up a law, you go to these people. The orientation process is where you learn a lot. You also learn a lot from veteran legislators. I have called on Rep. Champagne, and Sen. Blaisdell, a number of times for what are really routine questions for veteran legislators, because as a freshman, you might not know or realize something off the bat and the people at the Statehouse and in my delegation are very good about helping out the new members. I have never had any major problems.

Do you find that the Statehouse is very partisan?

Some things are, some things aren't. The budget definitely is. Most of the Democrats in the House voted against the state budget, while most Republicans voted for it.

What do you see as a pressing issue for you to deal with while you are in office?

The accessibility of an adequate public education for this state's students. The cost of higher education has increased nationally on an average of 7-8 percent annually. The price of a college education is really out of reach for a lot of people. Twenty years from now I don't even want to guess how much it will cost to send kids to school. As a state government, we need to do what we can to ensure that everyone receives an adequate education, including those who cannot afford it.

Being a student, young and in this position, do you ever feel that other legislators take advantage of you?

At first, you get a lot of attitude because they do not know who you are. Sometimes they don't take you seriously, until they get to know you, and you've established some credibility. I think the average age of House (members) is around 60. A lot of these people are my grandparent's age and to be put on an equal level with someone of that age is kind of hard. Their view of the world is a lot different than mine. Many people in Concord treat the legislature as a social club, to go and see their friends. A lot of people forget why they are there and many really do not belong there. People would be horrified if they could see what is happening in Concord. I sit back and watch these people and I think there are some people that are doing a great job. The democratic leader, for example, is an amazing speaker, and he really cares about making things better for people. Nils Larson, the chairman of the House Education Committee is another, he truly cares about improving the quality of the state's education. There are others who could care less about the people they represent, and that's a disgrace.

You're in your 20's and most of them are 60ish, is attention called to this age difference?

They grew up in a world that does not exist anymore. Because legislators are only paid a hundred dollars a year and because it takes up so much of a person's time, the people who have the time to go to Concord are the people that are independently wealthy or retired. So what you have is an enormous legislature, very similar in their background and the average person in New Hampshire is not represented.

Lindy's Diner: Stepping Stone to the White House

Equinox/JESSE STENBAK

CAMPAIGN STOP — Lindy's Diner has become the center of the New Hampshire Primary.

Jonathan E. Cooper
Executive Editor

Lindy's Diner on Gilbo Avenue is no different from any old-style diner.

A quarter will buy you two songs on the countertop jukebox — 50 cents will get you five.

The counter is worn from 30-plus years of abuse, but the atmosphere at Lindy's has made it a landmark in the world of the New Hampshire Primary.

Politicians, campaign workers, journalists and members of the Secret Service flock to the diner, and it isn't because of the apple pie.

George Rigopolus, who has run the diner since the mid 70s with his wife Arietta, says politicians have been stopping by as long as he can remember.

"They've all been here," George says casually. "I don't really remember exactly when it started."

George may not remember when it all started, but he makes sure his guests know the candidates have visited.

In the center of the restaurant's placemats, surrounded by advertisements for local merchants, are pictures of President Clinton, former Presidents such as George Bush and Ronald Reagan, as well as past and present hopefuls like Paul Tsongas and Kansas Senator Bob Dole... the list doesn't stop there.

George says former Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Gary Hart, Paul Simon, Mike Dukakis, Lamar Alexander, California

Gov. Pete Wilson, Morrie Taylor and Texas Senator Phil Gramm have also made pilgrimages to the political crossroads.

Both George and Arietta say the candidates stop off at Lindy's because of the clientele the diner attracts.

"It's a working guy place," George says.

On any given day, Arietta says one can meet all kinds of people, "from the garbage man to the lawyers."

Dayton Duncan, author of Grass Roots: One Year in the Life of the New Hampshire Presidential Primary, wrote that "Lindy's is Keene."

"Campaigns go there because [Lindy's], in effect, symbolizes being in Keene as much as a picture of the city's signature Central Square," Duncan wrote. He also wrote that George and Arietta probably see "more Keene voters in a day's time than anyone else in the city," thus making it a haven for politicians seeking the vote of middle class America.

Former Congressman Dick Swett, who stopped by Lindy's last week during his on-going campaign for the Senate, says visiting the diner gives him a chance to listen to the public.

"I don't know what others' approaches are, but I always go to Lindy's to get feedback," Swett says. "I believe the people there are really the 'heart-and-soul' of the kind of voters I want to make sure I am addressing."

Swett also said the diner attracts "working Americans" and his visits give him the chance to "listen to folks of that segment of society talk about what they think the problems are and to give them an opportunity to hear some of the solutions."

"It gives you a clear idea of whether you're on track or not," Swett says.

During the 1996 Primary, George and Arietta have received visits from most every prominent candidate, including Republican Steve Forbes in mid-December. The day after the publisher's visit, the Rigopolus' received a call from Time magazine.

"They wanted to ask the waitress how much he left," Arietta recalls. Forbes left two dollars, but Arietta didn't say what his check totaled.

George and Arietta didn't seem to think much of a call from Time. After all, ABC featured the diner on a broadcast three years ago.

With the whirlwind of political activity surrounding the diner, anyone else might attempt to publicize and merchandize, but the Rigopolus take it all in stride.

Almost everyday, either George or Arietta can be found perched behind the register welcoming their regular patrons with a smile.

The Rigopolus' are still waiting for Presidential hopefuls Dick Lugar, Pat Buchanan and Alan Keyes to stop by, but with only 13 days until the Primary, they may find seats are tough to come by at this diner.

Steve Forbes gaining on Bob Dole

Joe Magruder
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A poll released today confirms Steve Forbes' strength, but shows likely Republican voters in the Feb. 20 New Hampshire primary question whether either Forbes or Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole is electable.

"The lack of confidence in both of the two current front-runners suggests that an opportunity exists for one of the second-tier candidates to emerge," said Kelly Myers, director of the University of New Hampshire Survey Center.

The random telephone poll conducted Wednesday and Thursday for the Boston Herald and WCVB-TV gave Forbes 29 percent and Dole 24 percent. That is a statistical tie, within the poll's margin of plus or minus 5 percentage points. It's a dramatic change from the last Herald-WCVB poll in mid-December when Dole led Forbes by 19 points, 35 percent to 16 percent.

Today's poll, of 413 likely voters in the GOP primary, had Pat Buchanan at 11 percent, Lamar Alexander 6 percent, Phil Gramm 5 percent and Dick Lugar 2 percent.

A poll released Thursday had Forbes surging ahead of Dole, 31 percent to 22 percent. That poll, by KRC Communications Research had a relatively high ratio of independents — 27 percent — who are allowed to vote in the New Hampshire primary.

Today's poll, which had a 26 percent independent voter ratio, confirmed the importance of independents to Forbes, the multimillionaire political neophyte who entered the race only in September. Among independents, Forbes led Dole 38 percent to 11 percent.

Myers said half of those who support Forbes don't think he would beat Clinton. Of all those polled, half said Clinton would beat Dole compared with 32 percent who said Dole would beat Clinton.

Renovations

Lloyd Building Changes Expected at No Cost to Students

Anthony Vogl
The Equinox

The former Lloyd P. Young Student Union is about to undergo an expensive facelift, and it should not cost students a dime.

Keene State College is about to experience a change that has not happened in the past years since 1978. The former student union is going to be renovated and turned into educational facilities and computer space.

"I think that the plan that has been implemented, or is in the process of being implemented, which Jay Kahn has showed me is an excellent plan," said Robert Ferragina, Student Body president.

In January, the University System of New Hampshire trustees who oversee Keene State's financial affairs committee reviewed the renovation and addition to the building in two ways. It would either be done as a phased project, one that would overall cost $7.8 million, or a non-phased project. In the phased project, $2.957 million will be put towards the renovation of the original 1928 structure and construction of an entry way which will be the future foyer and will provide new stairs to reach the second floor.

"(The) foyer is very key to a phase project," said Jay Kahn, vice president of Finance and Planning. It provides a sound attenuation for construction, provides a means of entry while the construction is taking place to the south of the building, and because the building has no temporary staircase, Kahn said.

The college is trying to minimize the throwaway cost of a phased plan.

A bill is currently being debated in the Public Works committee in the House called House Bill 1320A. This is to get the state to allocate the necessary funding to fund the second phase of the plan.

"I am in favor of anything that Keene State wants," said Sen. Blaisdell, a democrat from Keene. "(To get a bill passed) you have to sell it to the full legislature. Cheshire County has 27 votes in the legislature."

Recent budget cuts in the New Hampshire budget have made it difficult to pass the bill and a Republican congress, which does what the governor wants will not help the situation, Blaisdell said.

"The legislature works in biumiums," said Nick Germana, USNH student trustee for Keene State. "They pass a budget in the first year of the biumium. Generally, they do not appropriate funds at the second year of a biumium. I am confident that we can demonstrate a need for it."

As trustee, Germana has given Keene an additional vote in the amount of funding that Keene State receives from the University System of New Hampshire.

Editorial

Students Must Focus on Fed Budget Talks

It is safe to say that many, if not most Americans view debates on Capitol Hill the way most of us feel about Quantum Mechanics - too complex, boring, and otherwise unnecessary to bother with.

Of course Quantum Mechanics is not without its practical applications, such as predicting the nature of the Universe, or splitting atoms in search of progressively smaller particles, but hardly useful to the majority of the population.

Understanding Washington politics is infinitely more important to the average American than obtaining a firm understanding of behavioral traits of newly forming galaxies, unless, of course you're an astro physicist.

Americans with feelings of alienation toward Washington politics are abundant. Many of us do not have the time or energy to dedicate to a learning process that is not only ambiguous, but changes so rapidly as to leave the lay-person in a blurry stupor.

One such debate, which has been harped on in the media to a mind-numbing apex, is that of the Federal Budget. Ironically, this debate, which in all likelihood will be ignored by the majority of college students, may play one of the most important roles in the future of affordable public education in recent history.

Recently, Congress has been looking to solve its budget dilemmas (see related article, page 1). One idea tossed around the House is to eliminate or reduce funding to federally subsidized programs such as the Pell Grant.

Students of Keene State College and other marginally funded state colleges and universities must take a long, hard look at the current debate.

Though it may seem overwhelming at first, students have a most vested interest in the decisions that have recently or are on the verge of being realized.

Picture life at Keene State without federal loan programs. Some 60 percent of our student body receives financial aid, in some form. Without subsidized loans, the makeup would be dramatically different.

Keene State would be affordable to fewer students therefore pushing tuition and fees even higher. College would become accessible to only those privileged enough to be born into wealth, which will soon turn America into a strict caste society. This does not seem right in the land of opportunity.

Forbes is Not a Leader
We Should Trust

One television ad shows former U.S. Senator Gordon Humphrey endorsing candidate Steve Forbes. Humphrey was very conservative, although he ran a fair office in Washington and helped keep anti-nuclear activists informed when others wouldn't. The same ad shows Forbes head to head with Ronald Reagan. Oh, oh!

Lest anyone forget, our ballooning out-of-control debt came about when Reagan borrowed billions of dollars to arm us with nuclear weapons. Now we pay again to destroy them. Many of our federal tax dollars ceased returning to us, for public education, at the time in the early 1980s that Reagan sucked them up (or down) for nuclear weapons and delivery systems. We haven't recovered from that evil deed done to public education.

Now Forbes has said that nature—not industrial smokestack pollution—causes acid rain. I remember when Reagan declared catusp the "vegetable" on the school lunch trays. Forbes, as did Reagan, will indulge in such wishful thinking, but the voters of N.H. need not.

What underlies both the acid-rain rationalization and the catusp rationalization are denial of reality, or instinct to distance oneself from other's pain, or ignorance. None of those becomes a leader who needs our trust. No Forbes votes, please!

Is President Clinton
a Criminal?

When Bill Clinton failed to honor his induction notices or honor his R.O.T.C. contract in 1969, he became a criminal under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. How have these criminal charges been resolved? Is Bill Clinton truly the first person to serve under a Presidential pardon as President, or can he be arrested now, for the crimes he has committed?

The 'F-word': Why We Use It and What It Means

Feminism. You were probably thinking of something entirely different. Well perhaps they are not so different. Both "feminist" and the other "f-word" are often uttered with contempt and hatred or used to put another person down. But why feminist?

Well, mostly because feminism is misunderstood. Feminism is commonly thought of as a movement that tries to make the world treat women the same as men. Feminists are thought of as women who hate men.

In reality both men and women are feminists and feminism is not about hating men. It's about examining a woman's status and choices.

There are many types of feminism and each has its own focus and purpose. In fact, there are so many types that the study of feminism, called Feminist Theory, has become its own discipline.

Liberal feminism is the most similar to the common notion of feminism. Liberal feminists concentrate on lobbying for equality for women in every arena of life: education, civil rights and all of women's endeavors. The ideas of Mary Wollstonecraft, the author of "A Vindication of the Rights of Woman," and those of John Stuart Mill are considered liberal feminism because of their focus on equality, especially in education.

Radical feminists, also called lesbian feminists because of their separatist nature, focus on the accomplishments of women and the powers that women have. They celebrate the art, writing and scholarship of women and acknowledge women's power in choosing how to live. They show how women can take control of their sexuality, the power of reproduction and their approach to child rearing.

The radical feminist writings of Kate Millet in "Sexual Politics" and Mary Daly, who wrote "Gyn/Ecology," "Pure Lust," and "Outercourse," suggest how women can use the power that they have toward feminist ends.

Existentialist feminists like Simone De Beauvoir, however, ask the questions "Why are women considered subordinate to men? Why are women," as De Beauvoir puts it, "the second sex?" By concentrating on how women became the weaker, less important sex, existentialists try to get to the root of the inequality.

In contrast to the existentialists, the post-modern feminists attempt to deconstruct and reconstruct the notion of women as the "other" by celebrating "otherness." Post feminists challenge women not only to use their power as the radical feminists do, but also show how that power is meaningful in and of itself, regardless of what society has always considered powerful.

These four different types of feminism come from four different perspectives. The existentialists begin at what we might consider the root of the problem: why women are considered "other." Liberals concentrate on the social and political right to equality: giving women the right to overcome being the "other." Radical feminists pose a separatist solution that honors the "other." Post-modernists focus on how the present situation has the potential to alter how women are viewed as "other" and how "other" can be equal.

So here is the critical question: What does all that mean to us as college students, and as people learning to define who we are? None of us have to choose to be a liberal feminist or a radical feminist, but we do have to consider what we think is important. Do we care that a woman who has the same job and the same credentials only makes 74 cents for every man's dollar? Are we concerned that a woman's creative talents are overlooked? Do we want to focus on a woman's strengths?

One place that these questions can be discussed is in a group called the Feminist Collective. A few years ago, the Feminist Collective attempted to become a college affiliated student organization, but the members all graduated before their constitution was complete.

So now a group of students and a few staff and faculty members are re-creating the Feminist Collective. The first meeting will be held at 2 p.m. today-Wednesday, February 7 in the North West Conference Room in Aspire on the first floor of Elliot Hall. Come support women, learn about yourself, enter your writing and art for and F.C. publication, and attend activities, including theater performances, guest lectures and the Women's History Month Banquet.

Budget

The Senate, which approved the House version of the provision on Jan. 26, rejected an amendment sponsored by Democrats to restore $3.1 billion in education spending to the budget deal.

David Merkwitz, director of public affairs at the American Council of education, said politically, it's difficult to gauge whether the Department of Education will be funded at or above 1995 levels.

"With the resistance on the level of spending...we don't know if that's going to happen," he said.

He said the lack of a budget agreement has left financial aid offices at universities around the nation up in the air when it comes to developing financial aid packages. Without an approved budget, the Education Department has been unable to determine funds for Pell grants and other programs, such as College Work Study, Perkins Loans and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants.

That is having a serious impact on student financial aid, according to Judith Harper, interim director of the financial aid office at the University of Michigan-Ann Arbor.

"It's so hard to get up-to-the-minute news out of Washington," she said. "The continuing budget resolutions...[are] making us very nervous as we get close to informing students of their financial eligibility for the coming year."

Schools traditionally give students a financial aid package by March. "It's very important for students to know what their financial award will be so they can make a decision" on whether they can afford to attend school in the fall, Harper said.

But this year, the budget crisis is making it difficult to estimate grant and loan monies.

Some financial aid officers might still give out student aid packages in March but will emphasize that the final award depends on pending legislation, Harper said.

Forty percent of Michigan's 36,000 students receive financial aid. With the government shut-downs, some students never received their Free Application for Federal Student Aid. Others have sent in the forms, but processing has been delayed for several weeks.

Sid Holloway, associate director of the financial aid office at North Carolina State University, said his office has had "some trepidation" in planning financial aid packages. Like Michigan, about 40 percent of the school's 30,000 students receive financial aid.

He hopes the budget crisis will be resolved enough so that the Education Department will at least be able to operate at its 1995 budget.

The uncertainty of what's happening next in this "topsy-turvy" year frustrates him. "It's the craziest thing I've ever seen," he said.

"It's all a lot more tenuous this year," Harper agrees. "We need to let the Congress know that it's extremely important to have the budget settled for the sake of the students of this country."

Many students and families are unaware of the impact the budget impasse is having on financial aid offices, she added.

Nasreem Mazloom, a junior who works at the financial aid office at Michigan State university, said she is not concerned about the budget for the time being. "Right now, for this semester, I don't see it being a problem," she said.

But she is worried about the fall. "If nothing is resolved by mid-summer, I think we're going to be in trouble."

Smaller, private schools whose grants come largely from private rather than federal sources are not feeling as much of the tension.

"The budget impasse has not really been noticeable by us or by our students," said Joe Paul Case, dean of the financial aid office at Amherst College.

Less than 15 percent of Amherst's 1,600 students receive grant money from federal sources. But Case said knowing the amount of Pell Grants sometime soon "would be useful."

As the fate of financial aid programs remains uncertain in Washington, some education groups are hoping to see more of a commitment to students when lawmakers determine the federal budget.

"Budget votes aren't just budget votes," said Kazim Ali, vice president of the U.S. Student Association. "They're value choices."

By decreasing education spending, "you're saying that it's not a national priority anymore," he said. Kazim added that funding for education should be taken from another program, such as defense. "We have to be more serious about education being a right."

But many Republicans seeking to curb government spending disagree with that logic. "One of our priorities should be to get our financial house in order and get out of debt," said Rep. Howard "Buck" McKeon, R-Calif.

"The federal government is responsible for our safety—that's defense," added McKeon, who chairs the subcommittee on post-secondary education. Education funding should instead come from state and local agencies, he added.

Assault

She said she saw him outside her room later Saturday night. She called the police and has not seen him since.

In addition to the obvious pain of the situation, the alleged victim said the incident has spurred other problems for her as well.

She said an article in Friday's Keene Sentinel was not entirely accurate, and the paper did not talk to her prior to running the story.

The article, which appeared as a brief story, said only that there was an attempted sexual assault on campus, and that the alleged victim deterred her alleged attacker by hitting him in the face.

The alleged victim said the point is not that she hit him and he left, but that students should be more careful about people they don't know well.

She said even though she let him in, people should be careful about propping doors open, and letting strangers into their buildings.

"With someone like this on campus, I think other people should be taking more safety precautions," she said.

The name the alleged assailant gave the student, according to Retha Lindsey-Fielding, did not match anyone enrolled at Keene State.

Keene Police Sergeant Fred Parsells said that information has not been confirmed.

Myers called the race "highly volatile."

"Half of likely Republican voters continue to say that they could change their mind between now and the election, while an additional 14 percent are unsure," he said.

Myers said the survey challenges the traditional view that personal contact with the candidates is key to winning the New Hampshire primary. Only about 4 percent of likely voters had seen Dole or Forbes in person, about the same percentage that had not seen a Forbes or Dole television commercial.

Ten Keene State College Students braved the cold to show their support for the environment and listen to leading New Hampshire environmentalist at a rally at the Statehouse in Concord on Friday.

Among the speakers was Adam Werbach, the founder of Sierra Student Coalition, who asked, "Whitewater or clean water?" And from the roar of the crowd it was evident that clean water was the answer.

Werbach said at this stage in the presidential race, important issues such as the environment are pushed aside by the media and the focus is put on the candidate's hair pieces and mistresses.

"Last year when we had a trustee from UNH, they really do not understand the needs of Keene and Plymouth because a university which is considerably larger than Keene State...they really do not have any idea of the problems facing us."

Earlier last semester, Ferragina escorted a group of Senators around the campus, showing them the low level of technology. "We showed them the areas of campus that we would like them to allocate funds for...in order to add some facilities and things to the school that students could benefit from, such as facilities to put more computers; more academic space."

"I think that renovating it and making it into a computer center is an appropriate way to use the old student center," said Jennifer Wooton, a junior majoring in Elementary Special Education. "It could be used for studying or an alternative place to coming to the student center."

The level of technology on campus is very low. Overcrowding of classrooms is also a major problem which the renovation of the former student union hopes to alleviate.

"I think that the computer shortage is one of the most serious issues," said Germana. "There is no doubt that no matter what field that Keene graduates go into, it is going to involve computers and the face that we cannot guarantee every student here equal access to computer technology is in my mind, not doing the job that we are supposed to do."

"I am in favor of anything that Keene State wants. (To get a bill passed) you have to sell it to the full legislature. Cheshire County has 27 votes in the legislature."

• Senator "Junnie" Blaisdell
(D - Keene)

"I like the idea of the new computer lab," said Steve Gallegas, a senior majoring in Biology. "I think that the greatest need right now is computer labs."

David Washington, a sophomore majoring in physical education agreed. "More computers is always a plus," Washington said.

If the renovation plan is carried out, two new labs will be built in the former student union.

Two temporary labs of 25 computers each will be built where the old bookstore was located.

If the $7.2 million needed to carry out phase two of the plan is acquired, the lab will be moved to a more central location in the building, and the area turned into classroom space.

"(This is) the first opportunity to bring a new academic building," said Chuck Thompson, Coordinator of the Computer Center. "(The building) can be better equipped to bring on the new technology."

In the first phase of the plan, two new computer labs will be added, and four instructional spaces.

Also, the offices of the education faculty in Elliot and Joslin will be moved into the former student union.

In the total project, there are 20 classroom and lab spaces.

"What we know is that we have the funds to do phase 1," said Kahn, "and we will proceed on that track. Our schedule is such that if they approve House Bill 1320A, we would be prepared to bid the total project in the same timelines."

Keene State hopes to finish the renovations on the former student union by the fall of 1997.

"We've had great support for this project from the trustees," said Kahn.

U Minn. Newspaper Held in Contempt of Court

• Student Editor Found Guilty of Refusing to Turn Over Unpublished Photos

Kelley Gary
College Press Service

MINNEAPOLIS—University of Minnesota's student newspaper has been fined for refusing to turn over unpublished photographs sought by prosecutors in an assault case.

Michele Ames, 26, editor of the The Minnesota Daily, and the newspaper were found in contempt of court January 25 after failing to comply with an January 19 state appeals court ruling that ordered the photos be turned over to District Court Judge John Stanoch.

"On behalf of the staff at the Minnesota Daily, we have respectfully decline to comply with the order," a tearful Ames told Stanoch, who was to review the photos in his chambers and determine whether they could be evidence in the assault trial.

When Ames refused to turn over the photos, Stanoch fined the Daily $250 a day for each day the assault case was in court.

Ames, who could have been jailed for contempt, was spared. "I never intended to directly disobey a judge," said Ames.

Cyberspace, Online top list of Most Over-used Words

College Press Service

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich.—Be careful of what you say.

The banned words list is out. Computer-speak such as "cyberspace" and "online" topped the annual list of overused clichés that deserve to be "unplugged," according to Lake Superior State University.

The university's public relations department, who compiled the 20th annual list, aimed jabs at a collection of words and phrases that it found objectionable, including revisit, touch base, done deal, and on the same page. The word "online" was near the top of the university's list of offensive jargon. "Where is the 'line' that everyone is on?" nominator Michelle Batterbee asked. "It sounds like some place a fish should be."

The O.J. murder trial also spawned banned words and phrases for the list. They included "the race card" and those ubiquitous initials, "O.J."

And such MTV terms as "alternative music" and "unplugged" were targeted for being overused.

News reports about the civil war in Bosnia were criticized for using the euphemism "ethnic cleansing" for genocide, and referring to foreign troops with the oxymoron "peacekeeping force."

State of the Union Receives Mixed Reviews by Educators

Colleen DeBaise
College Press Service

WASHINGTON—Targeting thousands of college students worried about tuition costs, President Clinton emphasized his support for education in the State of the Union address.

"Today, higher education is more important than ever before," Clinton said during his Jan. 23 address before Congress. "We should work hard to open the doors to college even wider."

Clinton enumerated a number of proposals during his speech, many of them surprisingly costly at a time when a Republican-controlled Congress seeks to curb government spending. Proposals include:

- a new merit-based scholarship that would award $1,000 to public and private high school graduates in the top 5 percent of their class
- a $10,000 tax deduction for college tuition
- an expanded College Work Study Program that would boost the current enrollment of 700,000 students to more than one million by the year 2000
- expanded Pell Grants
- a commitment to keep the direct student loan program and AmeriCorps, a national service program in which 25,000 students earn college money by working in their community a simple voucher worth $2,600 to be used by unemployed workers for tuition. Education groups are cautiously applauding Clinton's proposals, voicing their concern that some ideas might prove just too costly. The merit-based scholarship program, for instance, would cost an estimated $125 million annually. "Of course we were glad to hear [Clinton's] defense of direct lending and the AmeriCorps programs," said Kazim Ali, vice president of the U.S. Student Association, a group that lobbies for federal aid to students. But as far as Clinton's proposed new programs are concerned, "You would think that you'd want to save the need-based programs [such as Pell Grants] first," he said. Other groups, such as the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, said the merit-based scholarship program is "non-means-tested" and would help many non-needy students from upper-income families.

Radio Station Completes Move

DJs Adjusting to New Equipment and New Home

Keith Moriarty
The Equinox

Moving from a building that used to be a hospital into quarters that look like a dentist's office can't be easy.

It may have looked that way at first, but now that WKNH, 91.3 FM, Keene State College's campus radio station, is back on the air, broadcasting from its home in the new Student Center.

"I'd like to dispel the myth that you can't get the radio station on this campus as some people claim," said Stephen Chupaska, WKNH's Program Director. "If you can't get this radio station on campus, either your radio's broken, you don't know how to work a radio, or you have it on AM."

WKNH is now broadcasting at 309 watts, an improvement over the 100 watt broadcasting power it used to have. The station also has a new omni-directional antenna. In the past, the station's signal only traveled in one direction, which led to problems with on-campus reception.

The move, said Chupaska, went smoothly. The station's Executive Board has received swipe cards for after-hours access to the Student Center, and the keys to the station are on the way.

"The studio's nice," Chupaska said. "It looks like a dentist's office, but we're going to (decorate) and make it look like a college radio station."

WKNH can be heard on the third floor of the Student Center, via Muzak-style speakers in the hallway near the station and in the restrooms.

The station is now equipped with a news/performance studio, which Chupaska said could conceivably hold an entire band.

Topping the list of improved equipment to go along with the new facility, the station now has a new FM board, and will be getting a new Associated Press computer in the future.

"There's a new Emergency Broadcast System (machine), but that's something the Federal Government has to deal with, but we're getting that sometime in the next year," Chupaska said. He also said the machine has not yet been made available yet.

The move, Chupaska said, took longer than anyone expected, but that was out of the station's control. WKNH had to wait for FCC licensing, and beyond that everything else went according to schedule.

The station has no plans for the immediate future, but Chupaska noted that everyone involved is focused on getting settled into their new home.

"It's kind of like moving into a new house," he said. "You have to make sure you get the refrigerator in, and get the stove working...and then you can move over your bean bag chairs."

Young Band Offers Wide Range of Music on 'The Ebb and the Flow'

Danielle Hayford
The Equinox

"The Symposium was an important part of social life in ancient Greece," reads the band's liner notes.

In the present, however, Symposium is a hot new five-piece band from Franklin County, Mass.

Symposium was founded about a year and a half ago by lead guitarist Enoch Jensen and rhythm guitarist Chad Kuzontkoski, both of whom are 19 years old, they are also responsible for creating the music which drives the band.

Vocalist Jon Chappell, 20, is the source of the band's striking lyrics and is also renowned for his rousing stage performance.

Mark Desreuisseau, 19, provides bass guitar and is said to be one of the best up and coming bass players in the valley. Desreuisseau has previously worked with the Jensen/Kuzontkoski team in Symposium's former incarnation, Lycanthrope.

The band is made complete with long-time drummer Nelson Dyer, 22.

Symposium's first release was a self-titled demo album which has been reissued four times.

The Valley Advocate maintains that this five-song tape is "the best-selling local tape in the valley" and that the band itself is "at the forefront of the valley's heavy metal scene."

With the arrival of their new album, "The Ebb and the Flow," it appears that the hard-driving band is not to be outdone anytime soon. see SYMPOSIUM, page 14

Profile

Christian Slater's Life is a 'Bed of Roses'

Ian Spelling
College Press Service

Soon enough, there will be no escaping Christian Slater. The enigmatic star of "Heathers," "Pump Up the Volume," and "Robin Hood" has been rather busy as of late.

Currently, he can be seen as the king of plants in the romantic drama "Bed of Roses," and later this spring, in the high-stakes action film, "Broken Arrow."

Slater, chatting as he smokes a stogie during a conversation at a Manhattan hotel, comes across much like many of his characters. He's bright but cagey, talkative but elusive. But considering the fact that it's been a while since the New York born-and-bred actor has faced the press, one can be thankful that he's talking at all.

In "Bed of Roses," which was shot on the streets of New York, Slater plays a floral shop owner who sees a woman in trouble, comes to her emotional rescue and then falls in love with Mary Stuart Masterson. The actor, 26, reports that the film reaffirmed his belief in the notion that even in this competitive, men-and-women working era, people can still be romantic.

"I think people are capable of romance. I think of myself as a pretty romantic person," he says, smiling the kind of sly smile one might expect from a guy who has dated actresses Samantha Mathis, Kim Walker and Patricia Arquette, as well as model Christy Turlington. "I always want the most romantic thing to happen, too. I'm an optimist."

While it may take a kiss from the movie gods for a film as sweet and simple as "Roses" to arise from box-office obscurity, big things are expected of "Broken Arrow," which pits Slater against John Travolta. "It's an action movie about two fighter pilots who were buddies," he explains. "John turns bad, and I have to stop him."

Travolta's character threatens America with a nuclear weapon he has stolen, while Slater's guy is the voice of reason.

"I'm the good guy," he says. "It's kind of interesting how all of this stuff happened."

Animated Motion Pictures have come a long way

With the creation of the motion picture came, almost simultaneously, the creation of the animated "cartoon."

In fact, some of the earliest motion picture machines used hand-drawn images instead of photographs.

The first 40 years of animation consisted mainly of rather crude, black and white short films. In 1937, Walt Disney presented the amazing, hugely profitable "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" (in glorious technicolor), and the feature-length cartoon was born.

Although many studios produced short cartoons to accompany their features, Disney dominated the animated feature market, creating classic animated films which have endured (and continued to make money) for decades.

Long after Walt Disney's death, the Disney studios continue to reign supreme, releasing at least one new animated feature every year. "Toy Story" (1995) represents another breakthrough for Disney: the first wholly computer animated feature. Mesmerizing and fiercely entertaining, "Toy Story" will easily top $200 million in domestic box-office sales and will almost certainly earn a "Best Picture" Oscar nomination. This proves that after 60 years, the public still loves cartoons.

Even though there are few adults who don't enjoy them, animated features are almost exclusively marketed towards children. However with the creation of a "ratings system" in the late '60s some filmmakers got the brilliant idea of making feature-length cartoons for adults. One of the first to attempt this with any degree of success was Ralph Bakshi, the animator who created the "Mighty Heroes."

In 1972 "Fritz the Cat" was unleashed on an unsuspecting public. Based on the twisted work of R. Crumb, "Fritz" was the first X-rated feature-length cartoon (the rating has since been changed to 'R').

Set in the explosive, radical underground of the '60s, the title character gets himself into the craziness—engaging in group sex, smoking hash, and leading other radicals into revolution.

"Fritz the Cat" was a minor phenomenon, doing well both financially and critically. It certainly indicated that there was an audience for animation beyond the knee-high, ankle-biting set.

As an examination of the troubled 60's, the film is marginally effective, but to audiences in 1972 it must have seemed revelatory. Using animals to portray different members of society (cats are Caucasians, crows are African-Americans, pigs are police officers) allowed audiences to view themselves and their societal counterparts in perhaps a less inflammatory way than a live action film dealing with the same subject matter. "Fritz the Cat" is, in my opinion, more of a political statement than exploitation—and it is certainly worth a look. Warning: beware of the lame sequel "Nine Lives of Fritz the Cat" which neither Bakshi nor Crumb had any involvement in.

Bakshi utilized the success of "Fritz" to forge a career.

vocal harmony and a crash of thunder.

The quick, upbeat "River Walker" shows the diversity of Symposium and is a definite change from "The Mist Men."

There is a short yet spectacular bass solo that stands as an example of Desreuisseau's adept skill on the instrument, while also showcasing the abilities of the guitarists.

They take the song out with a bang.

"Funky M.E.N.D." is the closing number on the album and has a real jazzy feel to it. The song is an instrumental yet an unbelievable song.

The instruments are well-mixed on this song, and throughout the entire album.

The rhythms are complicated in "Funky M.E.N.D.," and when coupled with the great chemistry that exists between the band members this makes for a great song.

Dyer's slamming drum solo finishes out this remarkable album.

This compact disc is well worth buying.

Overall, it presents a great band and a great mix of music.

If you would like to experience Symposium playing live, a CD release concert is scheduled for Feb. 8th at C.R. Goodies.

Copies of "The Ebb and the Flow" will be available, so pick one up and see what a great local band sounds like.

ARIES: (March 21-April 20)

You will see financial dealings improving this week. And it may be best to stick to time-tested realities. Steer clear of all who cannot be trusted, or seem to be working towards a goal purely for themselves. You enjoy change, variety and adventure.

TAURUS: (April 21 - May 21)

Think before you speak and to make sure you have all your facts straight. If you are involved in a love affair, it can be especially intense right now; and may be an excellent time for a proposal. If uncommitted, it's time to discuss the future with a potential mate.

GEMINI: (May 22 - June 21)

This week may not be the best time to settle old grievances or new arguments, or try to make much of an impression with anyone. It may be best to adopt a low profile. Avoid hassling with a co-worker, for it's a no-win situation. There is high potential for monetary gains.

CANCER: (June 22 - July 23)

Now begins a fortunate period for your family and home interests. It's time to make a list of changes you've been contemplating, perhaps a sale of real estate. Feelings are intense in the romance department, so sidestep a showdown that could be memorable.

LEO: (July 24 - August 23)

Don't bottle up your feelings; express your anger in a positive way. Remember to speak clearly to avoid any misunderstanding. During this year, relatives are bound to play a bigger role in your life, and pleasantly so. Avoid arguing with family members.

VIRGO: (August 24 - September 23)

Expectations are high and you are apt to run into obstacles wherever you turn. It may be best to lie low, and not make waves, waiting for a more opportune time. Money trends are promising, but not immediate. People you deal with tend to be overemotional.

LIBRA: (September 24 - October 23)

Happiness and financial success are surely on their way to you. Someone may be trying to involve you in a financial deal which just does not feel right for you - hold your ground. There is delightful rapport with a mate, lover or close friend.

SCORPIO: (October 24 - November 22)

A new romance may be waiting in the wings for you. It might not be a new person, but somebody you already know, and hadn't realized the possibilities before. You will make great progress in self-knowledge and spiritual growth in the coming year.

SAGITTARIUS: (November 23 - December 21)

It's an excellent time for beginning a domestic project or closing a real estate deal. Most of the week will find you in an upbeat mood, possibly planning a get together with friends. Don't let minor money problems dampen your spirit - things will work out.

CAPRICORN: (December 22 - January 20)

There seems to be questions from all sides regarding your career and business interests. But after this week, these problems will clear up for many months. Meanwhile, it may be best to postpone important decisions. There may be tension on the homefront.

AQUARIUS: (January 21 - February 19)

Your physical energy is at a low point this week. In the next few weeks, you are bound to make major decisions regarding your personal life, so think about your moves and plan accordingly. It looks like time to cultivate a whole new circle of friends.

PISCES: (February 20 - March 20)

This week will basically be another struggle for survival, primarily on the job, but also in other people's conflicts. It will be tense for awhile, and it would be best for you to tread very lightly on others' sensitivities. Keep business facts to yourself for now.

IF THIS WEEK IS YOUR BIRTHDAY:

Look towards the goal you've established for yourself in your career. Try to sidestep any minor difficulties and see the whole picture. Pay attention to your mental and physical vitality, and stay away from situations which will end in over-spending, overdoing or overindulging.

Slater

• from page 13

Bed of Roses' and 'Broken Arrow' are definitely two very different films and roles. I don't know if I did that intentionally or not, but I'm happy about it. It's important to stay versatile."

Slater says he doesn't concern himself too much with making hit movies, and his track record bears him out.

His flop list, like many actor's, runs long and includes "Gleaming the Cube," "The Wizard" and "Mobsters." Even though "Pump

Up the Volume" and "Heathers" are among his most popular films, they're more cult favorites than money makers.

His biggest hit remains "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves," in which he, not to mention Alan Rickman and Morgan Freeman, stole Kevin Costner's thunder. The film earned $300 million worldwide.

"I never really worry about the success of a movie. I've never gone into anything thinking, 'I hope this does really well,'" he notes.

"Of course, I want people to see the movies, but so far I've just done movies where I related to the character and enjoyed the script. I haven't even thought about who was directing them or who was in them. In the future, I'll pay more attention to those things and the other elements involved. But, in the past, I just hadn't been too concerned about all that."

Slater doesn't seem to worry about much at all, which probably accounts for a good portion of his appeal as an actor and a public personality.

In the past few years, Slater has made a splash in the tabloids for his romantic and gun-toting exploits.

He denies that he's dating "Friends" star Courtney Cox.

His favorite star is, not surprisingly, Harrison Ford, another guy who acts in film after film but tends to keep his private life as private as possible.

Even the tabloids do not unnerve Slater, who loves nothing more than to read them at every opportunity.

OK, so what's the best thing he's ever read about himself?

Slater cracks up, then peers into the air as he contemplates his answer.

"What's the best thing I've ever read? That I'm hung like a horse!" he says, grinning like a Cheshire cat. "That was good. I was very happy. It was a girl I went out with who was saying that about me, and I was really happy to hear that."

As "Bed of Roses" and "Broken Arrow" head into theaters, Slater will be at home in L.A.

There's no next project ready to shoot, but after having directed "Museum of Love," a short-subject film for Showtime, don't be surprised if Slater tries his hand at bringing a small feature-length film to the screen. "I had a great time doing that short. It was wonderful," he says. "I loved being in charge, loved the responsibility. I loved being captain of the ship."

Is Bakshi's career over? It's hard to say...I haven't heard of any projects currently underway. Perhaps he'll give in to technology and employ computer animation.

If he does, it's a safe bet that the subject matter will be aimed at adults. In the meantime, check out the early work of Ralph Bakshi—every film except "American Pop" is available on videotape.

James Steelman is a film major at Keene State College and a weekly columnist for The Equinox Bakshi's sails. The three films are interesting and ambitious, but none of them made enough money to insure the continuation of his career, and he disappeared for awhile.

In 1992, Bakshi was poised for a comeback. He had a commercially proven formula (mixing live-action with animation a-la-"Who Framed Roger Rabbit"), a somewhat respectable cast (Gabriel Byrne, Kim Basinger, Brad Pitt), and a large budget.

The result, "Cool World," was a critical and commercial disaster. Audiences spoiled by the gloss of computer assisted animation were not impressed by "Cool World's" unconvincing, flat, hand drawn animation.

News Briefs

Dispute Resolution Office looking for Mediators

Students, faculty, and staff members who have a good disciplinary history and are interested in becoming a Judicial Hearing Board member are welcome to pick up an application for the position in the Office of Mediation and Dispute in Elliot Hall by Feb. 11.

The Board, which is coordinated by Mark Schmidt-Gagne, listens to cases in which alleged policy violations have occurred on the college's part or by an individual associated with the college, and then must make disciplinary decisions on these issues. Common issues which have been brought to the Board include alcohol, hazing, and theft violations. The board uses weekly meetings to examine the evidence before a final decision is made.

Schmidt-Gagne explains, "When it comes time for an actual hearing it becomes the board member's responsibility to hear the evidence, weigh that evidence and make a determination in regards to whether or not someone is responsible for a violation of a policy."

The Board currently consists of seven members. The meeting times range from an hour to five hours, with the average meeting time about two hours, Schmidt-Gagne said.

Conference in Boston Will Explore Violence in Youth

A conference held in Boston on Feb. 15 and 16 will address the problems of aggression and violence among young people.

The forum will be lead by Dr. Arnold P. Goldstein, founder of the Center for Research on Aggression at Syracuse University.

Goldstein will lead several mini workshops demonstrating skills to help people deal with subjects like anger control, moral reasoning, and aggression replacement. The purpose of these workshops is to teach how to prevent violent situations and how to deal with the situations if they do occur.

There will be lectures, demonstrations, and group participation exercises included in the workshops to help teach these subjects. The conference is primarily for educators as well as professionals in mental health and juvenile justice fields.

For more information contact Marty Fuller at the Institute on Emotional Disabilities in Joslin House.

Lifetime Teacher Joins Staff of Keene State College

In the past, it was not as uncommon to find individuals with the dedication to remain in one profession all of their lives. John Couture is just such a man.

"I started as a teacher and I think I want to end up as a teacher," he said.

Couture has joined the staff of Keene State College as an assistant professor of education.

Couture is teaching two sections of principles and Philosophy and two graduate courses.

Eating Disorder Week gets Help From Counseling Ctr

The Keene State College Counseling Center will co-sponsor along with the Brattleboro Retreat an eating disorders information and screeningsession program on Tuesday, February 13, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

This is part of the Eating Disorders Awareness and Prevention Week and will be held in the Keene State Student Center, Mountain View Room, Third Floor.

Students, staff and community residents are invited to this information and screening in order to learn about eating disorders, and where and how to get help.

Symptoms of eating disorders often go unreported by the sufferers and unnoticed by family, friends, and health care professionals. The eating disorders information and screening is designed to educate the community about the signs, and to facilitate access to the appropriate professionals.

For more information regarding the eating disorders information and screening, contact Dr. Sandy Campbell at the Brattleboro Retreat, (800)-345-5550, Ext. 3486, or the Keene State Counseling Center, 358-2437.

Student Found Innocent in S.A.T. Cheating Case

ALBANY, N.Y.—(CPS) A student accused of cheating on the Scholastic Assessment Test has been vindicated in court.

In a 5-to-2 decision, the New York State Court of Appeals upheld two earlier rulings that the Educational Testing Service (E.T.S.), which administers the SAT, had "breached its contract" with Brian Dalton when it refused to release his test scores. In 1991, Dalton scored 1,030 points on the SAT. This was 430 points better than an earlier effort.

E.T.S. found the new test results to be questionable and refused to release Dalton's score.

Dalton has said he was sick during the first test and that better test preparation helped lead to his score improvement.

The court ruled that E.T.S. had failed to investigate his explanation.

Spiritual Sustenance

Did you ever wonder about that spiritual groups were available to you at Keene State? Have you ever wondered about your own spirituality or wanted to explore something different than what you are used to? Then fear not, for this article will answer your questions through interviews with: The Campus Crusade for Christ, The Keene State Christian Fellowship, Hillel, The Keene State Martial Arts Association, The Newman Center, and Paul Striffling, director of the Student Union.

Mike Peckham, president of Keene State's branch of the Campus Crusade for Christ, said that it is an international organization which is student run on 180 campuses and run by staff of the Campus Crusade on 150 Campuses nation wide. "The purpose of the Campus Crusade for Christ is to raise Christian awareness on campus," Peckham said. Even though the group is fairly new, arriving at KSC in 1994, they've been serving the campus with lots of hard work. Last semester we held a rave to inform people of our presence, Peckham said. "This semester we want to do more." The Campus Crusade for Christ holds weekly meetings, Bible studies and address current issues in the Bible. Aside from that, they attend conferences where they share and learn about Christianity with organizations from other campuses. "It's a real learning experience," said Peckham.

The Keene State Christian Fellowship (KSCF), is a non-denominational Christian organization that is open to all students. Their purpose is to develop a personal relationship with God through Christ. They want to strongly encourage and support all people to search for truth and have a deep respect for everyone's spiritual journey. This group was founded in 1992 and wants to promote consideration and love for all people on campus. This group differs from the Campus Crusade for Christ in the respect that it champions support of its members rather than educating members through the Bible. KSCF offers bible study and is engaged in lots of community ranging from the soup kitchen to Big Brothers/Big Sisters. This past semester, KSCF was a participant in the Holiday Fair held in the Student Union. They also attended a conference in Boston last semester.

Hillel is the Jewish organization on campus. They throw parties, participate in all Jewish religious holidays and are open to anyone and everyone wanting to learn about Judaism and other issues. The hillel organization operates in 200-300 colleges. Last year they went to a conference in Boston. Keene State's Hillel organization is associated with Ahava Achem, the synagogue in west Keene and it is possible to arrange rides to their religious services. Hillel corresponds with colleges in England and Israel. In the past, members of Hillel have gone to leadership training workshops where they have met with members from other Hillel organizations.

The Keene State College Martial Arts Association (KSMAA) is open to all students. "According to the Shugendo, the way to enlightenment is to be found on the path to mastery," said Jason Bennett, the president of the KSMAA. Bennett, who is an 18 year student of Takami Ryu-Tai Jutsu, a 500 year old martial art, takes this spiritual statement to heart and encourages others to unlock their potential through the study of martial arts. Martial arts can bring focus and direction to your life as well as the satisfaction of personal achievement.

The Newman Center provides students with an opportunity to explore cultures other than their own. Mary Anne Damato says that they do a lot of learning about Native American Cultures as well as providing the students a place to hang out and make friends. The Newman Center holds holiday dinners for students to participate in. Last year's Thanksgiving feast was a success with 150 students attending. The Newman Center is a non-denominational organization which is concerned with helping students find their place in the world.

In this article, I have written about some of the organizations that help students explore and express their spiritual side. There are also other places for spirituality on campus such as Campus Ministry. These groups are always looking for more members, so may the spirituality find you where you search.

Contempt

She added she'd rather go to jail than hand over the photos.

Ames, who was a reporter for the Daily when the controversy over the photos first erupted, has found herself tossed into the lengthy court battle over photographs taken by a Minnesota Daily photographer at an October 1993 Progressive Student Organization (PSO) rally. During the rally, Daniel Simmer claims Kieran Knutson, who was working "security" for PSO, assaulted him with a flashlight. Knutson was charged with third-degree assault but says he swung at Simmer in self-defense.

There was a question as to whether Simmer was wearing brass knuckles, and the Hennepin County attorney's office has said they had hoped that the photographs would help settle the case that 100 eyewitnesses with conflicting testimony couldn't.

"I guess that's not good enough," said Ames, referring to the number of people who saw the fight.

The Minnesota Daily contends that the photos are protected by the First Amendment and the Minnesota Shield law, which protects unpublished material from becoming part of a criminal prosecution. The Daily argues that giving unpublished information to police or prosecutors can cause reporters to be viewed as an arm of the law, creating a "chilling effect" on their ability to gather the news.

But prosecutors have said a journalist has the same duty to testify as any citizen who witnesses a crime.

"It's dangerous," said UM journalism professor William Huntzicker, commenting on the appeals court decision. Huntzicker also serves as the newspaper's editorial adviser. "It makes reporters first choice for witnesses instead of last choice."

University of Minnesota journalism faculty have supported Ames and the Daily in their struggle. A December release applauded the newspaper and editor in their efforts "to protect unpublished materials from being reviewed by police, prosecutors and the courts when alternative sources are available and where there is no compelling public need for the information."

Huntzicker recounted a 1994 Duluth, Minn., case in which an insurance company wanted a newspaper's unpublished photos of an accident scene. The court ruled for the insurance company.

"There needs to be the same three-part balancing test [for unpublished photos] as there is for source," said Huntzicker, who explained courts often weigh a source's right to remain anonymous and a reporter's freedom to gather the news against the public's need to know. "Television news could really be affected [by the Daily case]."

Already the Daily's lawyer has submitted its case to the state's Supreme Court, which declined to hear it.

"It's been like a roller-coaster ride," the Daily's attorney Marshall Tanick said of a case that has covered the tenure of three Daily editors. "On two different occasions, the subpoenas were quashed, the appellate court split in rulings. It was not pleasant; it was very painful."

But Tanick said he thinks the court's ruling generally supports a journalist's right to protect unpublished photos. In certain circumstances, the rights of journalists may be overruled, he explained.

He called the Daily's actions an act of civil disobedience. "Journalists should not buckle under," Tanick said.

On Jan. 27, the jury acquitted Knutson. Ames says she's relieved Knutson's acquittal appears to mean that the court battle is finally over but said it had "not been the best week."

"I'm sad and tired," said Ames. "Talk to me in three months; maybe then I'll have perspective."

70 Dedicated Students to Help Those in Need

Rick Fink
The Equinox

Despite a lack of funding, 70 Keene State College students are gearing up for the fourth annual Alternative Spring Break trip to help build low income homes in communities and assist social service agencies.

The Keene State Community Service department has been sponsoring Alternative Spring Break for students who want to do something different with their time off. Students work with Habitat for Humanity building projects and working with the community.

The project is growing in popularity with more than twice the membership compared to the first trip three years ago. This year Keene State students will be working in Michigan, South Carolina and Philadelphia.

So far, the volunteers have one hurdle left to face: money. The price tag for this trip is $16,500 and not all of it has been raised.

"We've raised cash and have pledges now for a total of $11,000. I'm confident that we'll raise it. Students are out in the community talking to organizations and businesses looking for support," Don Hayes, coordinator of community service said.

The Community Service office is also looking to college faculty and campus organizations for financial assistance. The Social Activities Council has already made a $1,000 commitment to the project and organizers are asking for $2,000 from student government.

"We are doing a campus mailing to all faculty to encourage support because they have helped us in the past," Hayes said.

Habitat for Humanity is an international organization that enables students to build houses for low income families. It also offers students from different schools to work together. The participation is steadily increasing from year to year.

Students are supervised by a site manager who is paid by Habitat for Humanity to assist students in carpentry on their project. While working in a community many miles away from home students get exposed to a different lifestyle that is incomparable to their own.

"Students definitely come back with their eyes open to some of the issues in this country, and how to deal with them," said Hayes. "They also come back as advocates for the less fortunate folks."

One group going to Philadelphia will be teaming up with a social service agency in the inner-city to help raise social issues within the community through programs and discussion.

"One statistic which is interesting is that the first year we had 30 members and this year we have over 70. At least 50 percent of the students on campus the following year participated a second time," said Hayes.

"A lot of times students are broke this time of year so we're offering an opportunity for students to go somewhere and raise the money ourselves and actually take ourselves there," said Jason Crooks, a senior and trip leader. "We're going to Michigan this year and also two other trips. It doesn't require a lot of money and it is a lot of fun."

"It's a great experience. I love meeting new families. People are really nice and appreciate what you do for them," said another trip leader, Jenny Plante.

CONSTRUCTION - While many students will head for the beach during spring break, a group of 70 Keene State College student workers will offer their services to the less fortunate.

Genetics may be Responsible for S.A.D. Disorder Appears More Often in Twins, Researchers say

Brenda C. Coleman
AP Medical Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — People prone to eating more, sleeping more and feeling blue during winter are likely to have relatives with the same problem, a new study found.

Seasonal mood changes tend to run in families, with at least 29 percent of the risk due to inherited factors, researchers said in the January issue of the Archives of General Psychiatry, published by the American Medical Association.

Researchers studied 4,639 adult twins from Australia to explore genetic influences on seasonal changes in mood, energy, social activity, sleep, appetite and weight. Such changes are most common in winter when days get shorter and the body is exposed to less natural light.

Studying Australian twins allowed researchers to distinguish between holiday blues and winter seasonality, said lead author Pamela Madden, a research instructor of psychiatry at Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis. Australia has winter when the United States has summer.

The researchers found that when a fraternal twin reported problems with seasonality, the risk of a co-twin having the same experience increased by 50 percent compared with the average person. In identical twins, the risk increased by 75 percent.

Fraternal twins share about 50 percent of their genetic material, and identical twins share 100 percent. A higher risk among identical twins indicates the additional risk is associated with genetic influences.

The researchers found little difference in risk between men and women.

People with the most extreme forms of seasonal mood changes suffer from the psychiatric illness, known as Seasonal Affective Disorder, or S.A.D., a form of depression that responds to treatment with bright lights.

Only about 2 percent of the study's subjects were afflicted with S.A.D., and a co-author said that was not enough to determine whether S.A.D. runs in families, as does depression, which is not linked to seasonal changes.

"It would seem intuitive, logically, but that's not the same as saying it's actually been demonstrated," said Dr. Norman E. Rosenthal, director of seasonality studies at the National Institute of Mental Health.

Further study is under way, he said.

How To Get a Ski-Bum Job in France

Doug Lansky
College Press Service

VAL D'ISERE, France—In Val D'Isere, there are two conflicting forces facing every wanna-be ski bum. One is to find a job. The other is to tell the truth. Most people can't do both. The employers want someone with experience, but no one has much. And unless your college offered Ski Bindings 101, Principles of Gore-Tex or an adjunct on Helping People Sit On A Chair Lift, your only alternative is to bluff a little and figure out the job later.

For example, the only thing I knew about ski edges when I arrived in Val D'Isere was the kind of sound they made when I took my pair over some rocks. But that didn't stop me from applying for a job as a professional ski tuner for a ski shop called—and this is the real name—Snow Fun. I guess the French owners assumed anyone applying would be qualified so they didn't bother to check my credentials. If they had, they probably would have found somewhere deep down in my file: "Doug has no clue."

I worked all night in the basement of Snow Fun, tuning skis with some French and Danish guys who were very helpful because, I think, none of them had had any experience when they started, either. I messed up a lot of skis at first, but as my co-workers were quick to point out, "They're just rentals."

I learned how to melt p-tex, apply wax, sharpen an edge, remove nicks and throw beer cans around the room with deadly accuracy.

The best part was that I could borrow any skis I wanted and use all my newly acquired ski lingo on chair lift rides. "Oh, you're a ski tuner," someone would say. "What do you think about this pair?"

"Too bad about that flexing side-wall structural torquing gauge around the midframe, n'est-ce pas?"

The worst part was the I was usually too tired to ski at all, which defeated the whole point of being a ski bum.

After only a week at Snow Fun, I heard about the opening for a snowmobile mountain guide. This job was teeming with perks. Triple the pay of any other job in town (over $20 per hour), good work hours and, most importantly, a walkie-talkie, the carte blanche of any ski resort. Everyone knows you can just mumble something into the radio, cut in line and everyone will think you are on some official errand for the resort. It's priceless.

When I interviewed for this job, I did my best not to perjure myself. The boss, Didier, was a short, skinny neurotic guy with glasses and a hokey hair cut.

Didier: "Zo you can drive zee snowscotair?" ("Are you a trained professional snowmobile driver?")

Me: "I'm from Minnesota. The snowmobile is practically our state bird." ("My mother never let me near one. Next question.")

Didier: "Zo you can drive

zheim?" ("I have no idea what you just said.")

Me: "Look, Minnesota is like a giant glacier. We drive snowmobiles to work." ("Please change the subject.")

Didier: "You have zee permizzion?" ("You have a work permit?")

Me: "Of course, I'll just have to adjust the name on it to your company." ("There isn't a chance in Helsinki they'll let me transfer it.")

Didier: "Okay, you can have zee job." ("Is my accent annoying or what?") I showed up for work that night more than a little nervous. I was quivering like a fondue stick in a stiff breeze. But so were the tourists—all 10 of them, each on their own snowmobile. Bruno, the other guide, was going to lead the group. My job was to stay in the rear as a "sweeper" and help the tourists when they got their snowmobiles stuck. Bruno gave operating instructions to the group in French, and I tried to pick up what I could, but my French wasn't exactly dazzling—Didier had hired me primarily to converse with the few English-speaking tourists. Fortunately, these snowmobiles were pretty easy to operate. The gas was on the right, and the brake was on the left, and the other button was either the kill switch or the horn. Bruno led the group on some practice maneuvers on the bunny slope; then we started heading up the mountain in the dark for our one-hour tour.

The first person to get stuck was me. The whole group had to wait. It was pretty embarrassing, and I tried to make it look like a mechanical failure as Bruno circled around to help me out. I had managed to get the snowmobile stuck in about six inches of snow. I didn't think that was possible.

In the right conditions, like when falling off a cliff, these snowmobiles can really go. And the course was wicked: straight up, straight down, half-pipes, jumps. I only got stuck two other times, making that a total of three times more than any other person. At the end of the ride, I told everyone I was having spark plug trouble. I'm not sure they bought it. Either way, I realized I had found the best job in town, perhaps in Europe, if I could manage to keep it.

I did a little better with the next group, and better with the group after that. I bought Bruno a few beers that evening, and he gave Didier a good report. I was set.

Most of the groups, however, were not as well behaved as the ones on my first day. On a typical ride, people would drive into trees, into ditches and into each other. The accidents were usually proportional to how much they had drunk before the tour. We weren't giving Breathalyzer tests, so we didn't find out until after the first crash. Luckily, no one got hurt, at least not on my tour. In fact, I may have had the best safety record out of the eight guides. Go figure.

The one thing I learned about getting a job in a French ski resort is that it's always best to dress smart, give a firm handshake, look the boss straight in the eye and start lying through your teeth.

Clinton

• from page 11

"In many instances, therefore, this is a plan to spend dollars we don't have to solve a problem that doesn't exist," AASCU said in a statement.

But the group said it was pleased with Clinton's promise to keep direct lending, the program under which schools receive student loan dollars straight from the Department of Education, bypassing banks and lending institutions.

The program has been under fire by Republicans, who blame poor management on the part of the Education Department for high student loan default rates. GOP plans include limiting the program to getting rid of it entirely.

If the program is cut, "We already have a student loan program [that's] been in effect for years," said Rep. Howard "Buck" McKeon, R-Calif., who chairs the subcommittee on post-secondary education, training and lifelong learning. "There's nothing that prevents students, rich or poor, from getting a loan."

Clinton's proposals, such as the merit-based scholarship, sound "real good," he said. "The problem is...where do you get the funding?"

McKeon also questioned Clinton's proposal for a $10,000 tax deduction for tuition: "I would like to know how much that costs." The proposed new exemption comes at a time when a flat tax has become a national issue, he added.

The tax exemption, which would cost approximately $23 billion over five years, also failed to draw praise from the American Association of State Colleges and Universities.

"This expensive proposal would disproportionately benefit upper-income families with significant financial resources," the AASCU said.

The group said it was "disappointed" with the proposed initiative.

On the other hand, USSA's Ali called the tax deduction a "fabulous" idea.

"Certainly education should be tax deductible," he said. "The money you spend on that is in the national interest."

With coming elections, Ali added that college students need to be "on their toes" and express their concerns about education to Democrats and Republicans.

"It's not necessarily about your party, but it's about what your commitment to education is," he said.

Rally

• from page 8

"They need to move beyond their campaign rhetoric about common sense regulations and clearly state how they feel about the most extensive attempt to relax environmental protections in 25 years," said Pilar Olivo, spokeswoman for New Hampshire Citizen Action. "This rally is our way of telling presidential primary candidates that the environment is one of the key issues this year."

The 104th Congress is trying to roll back existing protections that would effectively repeal major provisions of the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Safe Drinking Water Act, the Endangered Species Act and the Superfund law to clean up toxic wastes according to Americans Mobilized to Protect the Environment.

Doug Minor, president of Keene State's Ecology Club, who attended the rally said Congress is using the excuse that environmental laws hurt big business by making them follow certain guidelines, which usually requires the purchase of special equipment.

"The fact is a healthy environment equals a healthy economy, if you don't pollute in the first place, you don't have the high cost of cleaning it up," said Minor.

Sam Davis, a non-traditional freshman and environmental science major said he felt that it was important to attend the rally to show President Clinton that the environment is an important issue.

The President was in Concord but did not speak at the rally. Instead the protesters ended the rally by greeting his motorcade.

Kim Murdoch, a Keene State student at the rally said that with New Hampshire being the first primary state of the nation, we play a large role in setting the key issues for the presidential campaign.

Werbach said he was pleased by the demonstration of wide support for the environment by both the adults and the students of New Hampshire.

"I was especially impressed by the large and vocal turn out of the Keene State students," Werbach said.

Keene State was the only representation of students at the rally.

"Olivo said students tend to put the environment on the top of their lists and if more students got involved, they could send a strong message to Congress. The best way to do that is to be active and vote and find out the presidential candidates positions on key environmental issues, she said.

Sports Briefs

Rough Weekend For Owls

This past weekend saw the Keene State mens hoop team drop both games, losing to the University at Albany and Le Moyne College respectively.

In the first game, the Owls kept it close, but lost 95-72. Matt Sone led all players with a team high 22 points.

Keene State was over-matched by Le Moyne in the latter game by a score of 111-72. Forward Doug "Roach" Jenkins had a game high 25 points.

Lady Owls Fall Short

The Lady Owls did not fair too well on their trip to the University at Albany and Le Moyne College.

Game one at Albany was not close, as the score showed 75-45 at the end of the game. Freshmen sensation Judy Izzo poured in 10 points and hauled in seven rebounds.

Sunday's game versus Le Moyne saw the same end result, with Keene State College losing by a score of 65-47. Randi Desiderio had a team high 14 points and 11 rebounds.

Lady Owl Erin Van Nostrand went down hard on the court and suffered a partial shoulder separation. Nostrand is listed as day to day.

Minutemen Still #1

The University of Massachusetts is still the number one team in the nation, with an astounding record of 21-0.

U Mass squeaked by a hustling Xavier of Ohio on Sunday, winning in OT, 78-74.

Answers

• from page 27

Franklin Pierce was 36-62 (58 percent) from the field, and 3-9 (33 percent) from outside the arc. Keene State's numbers were not as spectacular, hitting a dismal 21-56 (37 percent) from the field, and 1-9 (11 percent) from three point land.

For the Lady Owls, Lindsay Arnold had a team high of 15 points, while Kerri Martin dropped in 10 points and hauled in three rebounds. Keene State's Judy Izzo added seven points and two steals.

Franklin Pierce's Claudia Copeland had a game high of 19 points. Aiding in the Franklin Pierce victory was Juanita Brown with 13 points and Angela Beaudoin notching 11.

"For the first time this year, we did not put our best foot forward," said coach Boucher. "It is easy to play when everything is going your way, but when you are sitting on a pair of deuces, it is tough. There is no excuse for being flat."

The Lady Owls host New Hampshire College this afternoon at 5:30 p.m. in Spaulding Gymnasium.

Mismatch

• from page 27

The second half brought more of the same for the Owls, as Franklin Pierce came out shooting. The Ravens hit two threes in their first two possessions, but then slowed the game down with a half-court offense. At the 17 minute mark, the Ravens would go on a five minute scoring drought. Keene State began shooting better, but they could not muster enough points to get within a reachable margin.

With about nine minutes left to go in the game, the Owls began to apply full-court pressure. But the speed of Franklin Pierce would out do the Owls, as they pushed the ball up court quickly for easy baskets.

The Owls fought hard the entire contest, as they have all season long, but by the end, Franklin Pierce beat Keene State by 42 points.

The Keene State players had to give credit to the number one team in the NECC. Senior guard Matt Stone said that, "They are a strong team, and if they shoot like they did tonight, then they can beat anyone in the league."

Franklin Pierce had an incredible shooting touch the whole game, and finished off the Owls by shooting 49 percent from the floor, and 60 percent from three-point range. The Ravens also had four players in double figures, with sophomore T.J. Butler leading all players with 28 points. The Owls finished the game by shooting a poor 33 percent from the floor, and 31 percent for three-pointers. Doug Jenkins was Keene State's only player in double digits, with 13 points. With the loss, the Owls are now 0-15 in conference play, and 2-17 overall.

The men play tonight in Spaulding Gymnasium versus New Hampshire College, tip-off at 7:30 p.m.

Bruins

Ranford Makes Sinden Look Smart, as B's Roll Over Sabers

Jacob Mical
The Equinox

In 1990 Bill Ranford won the MVP award for the Stanley Cup Finals.

Now Ranford is in net for the team he faced in those games, and is performing for the Bruins. In his last three starts he has allowed only five goals and has made terrific saves.

Saturday afternoon Ranford and the Bruins hosted All Star goalie Dominik Hasek and the Buffalo Sabres. The absence of top goal scorers Cam Neely and Dave Reid had little effect on Boston's offense as they won 4-2.

The missing members enabled new Bruin Rick Tocchet to play on the Adam Oates line for the first time. Unfortunately for him it didn't last long. After receiving a hard check from Sabre Gary Galley, Tocchet fell to the ice and hit the back of his head. He was carried from the ice and did not return to the game.

Shortly after Tocchet left, Boston gained a power play and took advantage of it.

Josef Stumpel scored his twelfth goal of the season when he fired from the right faceoff circle to the far post. The Bruins defense then clamped down on Buffalo to end the period.

The second period began with the Sabres on a power play. Pat LaFontaine set up camp in front of the net, and it paid off when he slapped a one timer by Ranford, tying the game 1-1.

For most of the period the net-minders owned the game denying any change on the scoreboard. Tim Sweeney was able to alter this however when he took a pass from Todd Elik and beat Hasek through the five hole.

COURTESY PHOTO

WHERE AM I GOING? - Second year goalie Blaine Lacher, top rookie goal tender last season, may be looking for a new home with arrival of star goal tender Bill Ranford.

The third period showed a few more scoring opportunities. Steve Leach added to the Boston lead when he rifled a slap shot from the right faceoff circle that sailed by Hasek.

Randy Burridge tightened the game again three minutes later after he batted down a pass and flicked the puck by Ranford.

Down by one with time running out, the Sabres offense ignited but Ranford extinguished them by making spectacular saves.

With 1:50 showing on the clock, Burridge led a Buffalo breakaway. Ranford made the save but Sandy Moger dislodged the net. Buffalo was awarded a penalty shot because the officials felt the dislodging was intentional.

Burridge was given another opportunity but as he neared the net, Ranford poked away the puck ending the one-on-one.

Boston then smothered the Sabres and with only seconds left, Oates shot from the blue line for an empty net goal.

The Bruins take their 22-20-6 record on the road tonight when they play Buffalo. On Saturday Boston hosts the Flyers and its Legion of Doom line at the Fleet center.

LSU Athletes Win Sex Discrimination Suit

College Press Service

BATON ROUGE-Female athletes have won a victory at Louisiana State University, although it's not on the playing field.

U.S. District Court Judge Rebecca Doherty ruled Jan. 12 that LSU sexually discriminates against its female athletes by not supporting intercollegiate teams such as women's soccer and fast-pitched softball.

The school, found in violation of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 that prohibits sex discrimination at federally funded institutes, was given 20 days to come up with a plan that complies with the law. University spokesman Jim Crane said the athletic department is "working their butts off" to come up with a plan to present to the judge.

The department has already hired a softball coach and plans to start a team in 1997.

"Females who participate in varsity sports are athletes who happen to be female and not females who happen to wish to be athletes"

• Judge Rebecca Doherty
U.S. District Court

The lawsuit was started by five female students in 1994. Doherty did not order the school to pay monetary damages to the students because the discrimination was negligent, not intentional.

In her decision, she wrote that the violation resulted from confusion about the law, "arrogant ignorance... and a remarkably outdated view of women and athletes."

Doherty also wrote that the university "remains unaware that females who participate in varsity sport are athletes who happen to be female and not females who happen to wish to be athletes."

Bruins Formula For Success: Is It Defense or Power?

Chris Rattey

Fists Need To Be Flying in the Fleet Center

The Boston Bruins have been anything but successful so far this season.

General manager Harry Sinden and rookie head-coach Steve Kasper have juggled the team in numerous ways, but there always seems to be something missing. The Bruins lack one major portion of the game, and the solution is really simple, the black and gold need a goon.

The enormous void of goaltender has been filled with the acquisition of net-minder Bill Ranford. Some may try to place the blame on a defense with no depth, but the Boston blue-liners are steadily improving. This team can put the biscuit in the basket, so lack of goal production is not an explanation for the Bruins' mediocre record. What is wrong with the big, bad Bruins?

Boston owns the most embarrassing statistic in the National Hockey League, the least penalized team. The Bruins lack an enforcer, which is a necessity on the ice. Rather, the Bruins get pushed around game in and game out. And when somebody does dare to drop the gloves, they might as well lose the Bruins jersey, tattoo Everlast across their chest, and go hang around the Keene Boxing Club.

When a team has a fighter, a whole new dimension is added to the game. This dimension comes in the form of intimidation, which the Bruins have not had all season.

The recent trade for winger Rick Tocchet may help the situation, since his penalty minutes range near the century mark. However, I am speaking of the heavyweight madmen of the NHL, possessing a second instinct of how to handle the puck, and a first of when to land a stiff left jab.

The following is my dream team, four players that would look astounding with the B on their chest. These are the men that could step on the Fleet Center ice and change the entire pace of the game.

Mike Peluso, forward, New Jersey Devils. I just wish this guy did not wear a helmet. Who else would you play for but the Devils, when you actually look like Satan's version of a hockey player? Peluso is big, bad, and can even get that occasional goal. Every shift he plays, the opposing team is on the lookout. Peluso provided the physical dominance New Jersey needed in capturing the Cup last year.

Tie Domi, forward, Toronto Maple Leafs. How could a team like this be assembled without including the heavyweight champ of the NHL? Besides, any player that knocks out New York Ranger Ulf Samuelsson for absolutely no reason should be a unanimous draft pick. Mr. Domi is the epitome of the goon, willing to fight if you simply told him his skate was untied. Every city Domi goes to, his team respects him, fans love him, and opponents hate him...a rather harmonious combination.

Bob Probert, forward, Chicago Blackhawks. There are no fights in the NHL like the brawls between Bob Probert and Tie Domi. Probert brings a barbaric, yet poetic, dimension to Chicago's game plan, combining the ability to slug and score on a consistent basis. The Blackhawks have all the tools needed to make a run for the Stanley Cup in May, and Probert will be a key element.

Brad May, forward, Buffalo Sabres. If you watched the Bruins play Buffalo on Saturday, Brad May was on display, pounding the face of Boston defenseman John Rohloff with several hard jabs, May could have the quickest fists in the NHL, along with a warped psychotic mentality. He fits in quite well with the Sabres organization, the most penalized team in the league.

Boston needs to add the element of intimidation to a fairly talented roster. The big, bad Bruins did not acquire that nickname for using vulgar language.

Boston has seen some great fighters through the years, such as Terry O'Reilly, Stan Jonathan, Jay Miller and Lyndon Byers. Sinden needs to get his hands on an enforcer, before a playoff run is no longer a possibility.

If Boston doesn't pick up a prime-time swinger, at least lose the pretty, teddy bear raced uniforms.

I've seen figure skating costumes more frightening than that.

Boston Blue-liners Are Not What They Use To Be

What do the Boston Bruins and the New England Patriots have in common?

They both have pathetic, stinky and terrible defenses.

Sure, both teams have their crop of stars. While the Patriots have one of the finest, young linebacking corps in the league, the Bruins have Ray Bourque, arguably one of the game's greatest defensemen ever.

However, both teams will have ended their 1995 season with a disappointing result. Why? Because time after time their defensive unit has been riddled like Swiss cheese by opposing offenses.

The bottom line is, championships are won through great defense. This has been shown through history to hold a great deal of truth. Look at last year's Stanley Cup champion, New Jersey Devils. Their entire game revolved around their trap defense. The Bruins, through this weekend, have allowed 177 goals. There are only two teams in the Eastern Conference that have been more generous, the New York Islanders and Ottawa Senators, each are last in their respective divisions.

So why is the Bruins' defense having such a hard time? Let's take a look. One of the lone sunny spots in their punch-n-judy squad is, of course, Ray Bourque. He is having another Bourque season, yet he is 35 years old, and slowing down. When he retires in two or three years, there may be some real trouble, unless rookie Kyle McLaren continues to progress into a strong defenseman. McLaren is the other bright spot in this area that is as dark as a bear's cave. However, he is only 18 years old, and could flop like Blaine Lacher in his sophomore season.

Don Sweeney has always been well-liked by fans, but the bottom line is his production is not what it has been in the past, with a plus/minus of -4. John Rohloff means well, but as of last week he had five points, and a plus/minus of -10 through 44 games.

That means the opponents have scored 10 more goals than the Bruins when he is on the ice. Nice D! How about Rick Zombo? How about 46 games, 10 points, and a plus/minus of -13. Way to go Rick! The fourth defenseman with negative plus/minus rating is Dean Chynoweth at -2.

What about Al Iafrate? We'll be fine when he returns, right? Well, Big Al is rehabilitating his knee, again, and should get on the ice for the first time in months, in six to eight weeks. This would probably be good news in October, but there are only 10 weeks left in the season. By then they'll be headed for a first round sweep by Pittsburgh or New York. That's fine, I'm sure Iafrate would have dislocated a shoulder lacing up his skates anyway.

So what do you do, play more aggressive, picking up more penalties and let your already terrible penalty killing teams on the ice?

No way. The Bruins may have the least amount of penalty minutes in the league, but isn't that a good thing?

Who is second and third in least penalty minutes?

Detroit and Florida, who through this weekend had the best, and second best records in the NHL.

Who has the most penalty minutes? Buffalo, who wouldn't make the playoffs with their record if the season ended today.

You have to do one of two things. One, bring up a player from the Providence Bruins, or two...trade. Sure, you have to give to receive, but with another very solid, veteran defenseman, the Bruins odds of playoff success increase greatly. So where do you look? How about a struggling team that has two strong defensemen already. Like the Winnipeg Jets, with Teppo Numminen and Norm Maciver. Maybe the Calgary Flames with Steve Chiasson and Zarley Zalapski. I don't have all the answers, but then again my job isn't to win the cup of Lord Stanley.

I really hope that General Manager, Harry Sinden makes a move on defense, because he has an offense, as well as the goaltending.

But they are still another solid defenseman away from being considered a true threat to anyone better than the lowly and pathetic Ottawa Senators.

Lady Owls Still Searching for Answers

Paul Silverfarb The Equinox

The Keene State College Lady Owls had a tough time Wednesday against Franklin Pierce College in Spaulding Gymnasium, losing 84-53 on Spirit Night.

Franklin Pierce came on to the court with a record of 14-5, 9-4 in the NECC. They expected an easy game, and that was exactly what they got.

Keene State kept it close early on, but with 12:50 left in the first half, things started to get ugly. Bad shooting and missed passes caused the Lady Owls to fall behind 11-5.

Despite being down by six, Keene State maintained their composure. The Lady Owls got a basket and a foul to cut the Franklin Pierce lead to 14-11. This was the closest the two scores would get, as everything went wrong for the upset-minded Lady Owls.

Keene State became panic-stricken when Franklin Pierce's Juanita Brown drained a couple of three point buckets to extend the lead to 26-11.

Franklin Pierce was very effective from the outside, hitting 3-6 from the three-point line, compared to Keene State, shooting 0-4. Franklin Pierce shot 69 percent from the field, as the Lady Owls dropped 57 percent of their shots.

However, the physical play of the Lady Owls did not allow Franklin Pierce many easy hoops underneath the basket.

Many of Franklin Pierce's points came from pushing the ball down court, catching Keene State in transition for easy lay-ups. The Lady Owls found themselves down 49-22 at the half.

Franklin Pierce came out of the locker room to start the half with a 4-0 run. Every facet of the game was going Pierce's way. Bad ball handling, flagrant passes and turnovers did not help the cause of the Lady Owls.

With 15:33 left, Franklin Pierce extended the lead to 57-26. Every time the Lady Owls tried to close in, the duo of Juanita Brown and Claudia Copeland of Franklin Pierce drained shot after shot.

Judy Izzo, a freshman for Keene State, once again provided a shining spot for the struggling Lady Owls. Izzo got the crowd excited, draining a three and driving for a nice lay-up on the next possession.

Both teams were making their shots, but with 9:20 left in the game, the referees got into the act.

The ball got stuck between the shot clock and the backboard. The ushers tried to get the ball down, even the Keene State baseball coach gave it a try, but no one was successful.

Out of nowhere, the referee, with a huge hurl of a practice ball, not only got the game ball down, but sank the shot on its descent. This sent the crowd in a frenzy. "Suit him up and let him play!" rang from the Spaulding Gymnasium crowd.

When the game finally resumed, the Lady Owls became very aggressive, as Franklin Pierce committed a lot of fouls. But when the dust settled, Keene State found themselves losing to Franklin Pierce, 84-53.

Keene State College No Match for Division Two's Top Team

Mike Defina The Equinox

Keene State College promoted spirit night last Wednesday, and an energized crowd of over 400 students tried to give the mens basketball team a lift.

The Owls took the floor of Spaulding Gymnasium to play their arch rival, Franklin Pierce College.

However, even the most charged fans couldn't help the Owls, as they staggered to a tenth straight loss, which turned into a blowout, 97-55.

Both teams started out sloppy with missed shots and turnovers, but Keene gained momentum first.

A long three by junior forward Doug Jenkins gave Keene State an early 7-6 lead. But that would be as close to victory as the Owls would get.

After the bucket by Jenkins, the Owls suffered a nine minute scoring drought, on which the Ravens capitalized. Franklin Pierce went on a 22-0 run, taking the momentum and tempo of the game away from the Owls.

The Owls lacked three main ingredients in the game which the Ravens had: size, speed and unfortunately, an accurate outside shot.

The Ravens controlled the pace of the first half with their playground style, run-and-gun offense. Keene State simply did not have the speed to keep up with Franklin Pierce.

The Ravens were also on fire during the first half, shooting 56 percent from the floor, and a whopping 62 percent from three-point land.

The Owls, on the other hand, shot a dismal 29 percent from the floor, and 31 percent from three-point land.

Ken Ervin and John L'heureux, Franklin Pierce's six-foot eight big men, made it tough for Keene State guards to penetrate, and get easy baskets. By the end of the devastating half, the Owls went into the locker room down 54-22.

Kelbick Resigns After 11-Year Stint

Jim Mahoney
The Equinox

After 11 seasons with the Keene State College men's basketball team, head coach Don Kelbick has decided he will not return to the bench next season to guide the Owls.

Prior to the 1995-96 season, Kelbick requested and was granted an unpaid leave of absence from Keene State.

"I had 11 years of my life wrapped up into the program. However, throughout my career the team has always been in transition, and I didn't want to return to a team facing a similar situation."

• Don Kelbick
Former KSC Coach

Recently he informed John Ratliff, the director of athletics, that he has made the decision to make that leave of absence a permanent one.

"It was a very difficult decision for me," said Kelbick, "I had 11 years of my life wrapped up into the program. However, throughout my career the team has always been in transition, and I didn't want to return to a team facing a similar situation."

Kelbick took over the Keene State program in 1984, and went on to a career record of 72-221 overall.

His best season came in 1988-89 when the Owls went 13-15. His 11 years with the Owls ties him for the third longest stint at Keene State with William Caldwell (1930-42).

Only Sumner Joyce (1942-65) and Glenn Theulen (1968-84) have coached the Owls longer.

"Even though I only had the opportunity to work with Don for a short time, everyone had nothing but positive things to say about his loyalty to the Keene State program," said Ratliff. "We obviously wish him the best in his future endeavors."

According to Ratliff, Gary Kornfield will continue to serve as interim coach throughout this current season, and a nationwide search is underway to fill the position.

Three players on the team this year have experience under Kelbick. Matt Stone, a senior point guard, said he was a good coach. "He was the type of coach that would really do as much as he could for his players." Stone also wasn't surprised when he heard the news, adding, "he went through a lot. When he took the year off, I think he was just trying to make it a nice, slow, gradual process, rather than a real sudden, unexpected one."

Ratliff addressed the team's conference record of 0-15 as an inadequate measure of the team's ability on the court. "It's comparing apples to oranges. It's a division III team playing a division II schedule."

As far as Kornfield's performance, Ratliff said, "You could have brought in anyone. The result would have been the same, due to the resources and the drop to division III, as well as reduction of scholarships."

While other teams in Keene State's conference receive 8 to 10 scholarships, the Owls were only allotted 1.75 scholarships this year.

The search for a new head coach has begun, and the application deadline is March 1st. Optimally, the position will be filled by April 15th.

Swimming

Keene State College Swimmers Leaving Opponents in Their Wake

David Haley
The Equinox

Quietly, and amid very little fan-fare, the Keene State College men's and women's swim teams have surged to the forefront of the winter sports teams.

While the woes of the basketball program continue to be the talk of campus sports, the swim teams have done everything short of throwing a shark in the pool to get the attention of the school.

Saturday's meet saw the men improve to 10-4, while the women moved to 10-5 with victories over Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

The men spurred to their 128-98 victory behind the record setting performance of the 200-meter freestyle relay team of Jaime Lafleur, Matt Donovan, Gavin Kane and Robin Oelkers.

Their time of 1:35.65 easily bested the previous mark of 1:37.30, set by the 1993-94 squad, according to sports information director Stuart Kauffman. Oelkers in particular enjoyed a big day, placing first in the 50 and 500 freestyle events.

"I've worked hard on the distance events to build on my versatility," said the sophomore from Ramsey, N.J. "It can only help the team."

Senior Devin Cashman took first in the men's 100 freestyle, and was a force in the distance events with a victory in the 1,000 freestyle event.

For the women, the freshmen trio of Melanie Tripp, Jennifer Gannon and Kara Lavoie were too much for Worcester in the 128-99 win.

Gannon qualified for the New England Championships in the 50 freestyle by posting a time of 26:00.98, swimming the opening leg of the 200 freestyle relay for the Lady Owls.

It was another great performance for Tripp in a season full of them. Tripp cruised to victories in the 500 and 1,000 freestyle, and 200 individual medley.

Lavoie took first in the 50 freestyle and 100 butterfly events. Lavoie, the Wilbraham, Mass native, also teamed with seniors Corey Boughton and Regan Reed, as well as fellow freshman Seanna Mathews, to win the 200 medley relay.

With the men's and women's basketball teams looking for combined win number five, the swim teams have been a bright spot in an otherwise dreary season.

Clinton to Visit Keene

President to Speak at Central Square on Saturday

Joel Kastner
The Equinox

The last time Bill Clinton addressed Keene voters during a New Hampshire Presidential Primary, things were very different.

George Bush was in the White House, Keene State College students congregated in the old Student Union, and Judith Sternick was president of the college.

Oh, how things have changed. Saturday, President Clinton will address an anticipated crowd of 68 thousand on-lookers at Keene's Central Square.

Clinton, who will be visiting four New Hampshire towns that day, will land at the Keene airport on board Marine One sometime preceding his estimated 2:00 p.m. speech time. Joining the President will be the Keene High School Band.

Jake Stewart, press secretary for the Clinton/Gore '96 Campaign, said in a phone interview Tuesday that Clinton will ring familiar bells during the speech Saturday.

"I think he'll talk about some of the themes he spoke of in the State of the Union Address," he said.

Keene State students were again reminded of such themes during the visit by Hillary Clinton, who spoke in the Mabel Brown room three weeks ago.

Tickets to the Clinton visit will be available for students, first come first served, at the front desk of the Student Center, beginning today.

Students may request tickets between the hours of 8 and 10 a.m., 1 to 3 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m., at the front desk, said Kim Murdoch, Keene State sophomore and campus coordinator for the campaign. Students will be able to request 1 ticket each, and must present an ID to do so.

Students who are unable to get to the Student Center at one of the distribution times, are asked to call the Keene campaign headquarters at 357-9700 to make alternative arrangements, Murdoch said.

Clinton will be in Rochester before coming to Keene, and following the visit, will speak in Manchester and Nashua respectively.
