Dave Gleason

racked-up 15 goals last season and received All-American honors.

Gleason scored the game winning goal for the men's soccer team in last weekend's match against Concordia College. Gleason is the Owls' leading scorer with 5 goals this season. Gleason knocked in two of his five goals in last week's action.

Soccer team goes 2-0 in weekend action

The Keene State College men's soccer team triumphed over Concordia College in a hard fought battle, winning 3-1 last Sunday and steamrolled over the University of Lowell, defeating them 5-0 on Saturday.

The first half started off well for the Owls due to the use of good ball control and their ability to make several good drives.

Twenty-two minutes into the first half, Concordia came back to score a tough goal off Fabian Videla. This high shot rolled off Videla's hand's, hit the cross bar, came down, and was poked in by an advancing Concordia forward.

During the second half, Keene State played aggressively and controlled the game. Six minutes into the second half, Jim Prouty burned up the defense, walked in all alone, and tied the game 1-1. Two good attempts were made by Paul Gladu, who shot across the net, barely missing the upper left hand corner, and by Dylan Gamache, who bounced a shot off the cross bar. KSC men's soccer coach Ron Butcher said, "In the second half we came out like gangbusters and scored three of the prettiest goals I think we scored all season."

The action slowed down as the referee delayed the game several times, and made late, questionable calls that added up to red and yellow cards. The game heated up quickly, when cards were given to Jim Prouty and a Concordia player for fighting. Shortly after, Paul Gladu got a yellow card, and Steve Gallegos got a red card. The Concordia coach, Sean Kenney who was a former All-American at Keene State from 1984 to 1985, couldn't escape the whistle and was given a yellow card for arguing with the referee. This caused a lot of confusion in the stands, and the Owls were now short a player. Butcher said, "I think the referee took the game out of the hands of the kids and it became his side show. I don't think that a lot of the yellow cards were warranted but that is the referee's discretion and he calls the game."

These penalties made the Owls play hard and come back swiftly with two more goals. Dave Gleason came through on a break-away and lofted the ball over the goalies head, bringing the Owls ahead by one. Twelve minutes later, Brian Plona headed the ball into the net off a calculated cross by Matt Terwilliger, plunging Keene State ahead 3-1.

To top things off, Erich Ahnert was given a red card, following a yellow given in the first half and was dismissed with only a minute left in the game. Although the Owls were short two players for the remainder of the game, they held on for the win.

Last Saturday the team shut out the University of Lowell 5-0 at their third New England Collegiate Conference match. Coach Butcher said the team was able to rest a lot of its starters and everyone who went on the road trip played. Butcher added, "I think Saturday's game prepared us for Sunday's game against Concordia." During the game, Oswaldo Molina scored off two penalty kicks, Steve Gallegos scored one goal off a rebound and later punched in another off a throughpass. Matt Terwilliger scored his first goal of the season, heading the ball into U. Lowell's net off a cross.

Tonight, the Keene State men's soccer team plays against St. Anselm College at 7 p.m. at the new athletic complex. Coach Butcher said, "St. A's is a team that can give you trouble, counter attack a lot, and they defend to the death."

This Friday the New Hampshire All-Stars play Belgorod State (USSR). This event features former All-American, All-New England stars from Keene State, Plymouth State, and the University of New Hampshire. The game time is 7 p.m. and fireworks are at 8:30 p.m. Saturday, K.S.C. plays New York Tech at 3 p.m. at home.

To top things off the K.S.C. men's soccer team will face Belgorod State on Sunday at 1 p.m.

The NBA today: one way to get rich quick

Commentary

By Joseph Wyman
Equinox Staff Writer

So, ya say ya wanna be a big star, huh?

Well, I've got the plan on how to get to the big time, the ticket to ride, the magic carpet, the recipe for success, the whole nine yards on how to get rich quick without even breaking a mild sweat.

Okay, let's say that you're oh...6'11" and you have a body that resembles a brick wall. I know that it takes some imagination to stretch your five and six foot something frames to nearly seven feet but bear with me. Now that you have to duck when going through doorways, take a seat by your telephone. Call 1-800-GET-RICH (for our purposes I'll be the seven foot guinea pig of this little experiment.)

"Good morning, you've reached Mr. Bartelstein's office, home of the financial miracle."

"Yes, hello, I'm looking to become disgustingly rich over a seven year period."

"Well sir, we can send you our pamphlet concerned with the 'John 'Hot Rod' Williams Screw the National Basketball Association Plan.' I assume that this is what you're referring to?"

"Yes, that would be the plan I'm interested in. I heard that all you have to do is be a tall, sixth man bench-warmer with less than super-star status, to be the recipient of $26.5 million over seven years?"

"Now, now, Mr...?"

"Doe, John Doe." (Clever journalistic, under-cover pseudonym.)

"Now Mr. Doe, we don't guarantee that you will receive as much as Mr. Hot Rod Williams did.

However, we do guarantee that you will create a controversial stir throughout the country. This means that your name will appear in at least one major publication shortly after you've screwed you're desired NBA team."

"So I could be in, oh, let's say...SPORTS ILLUSTRATED?"

"Not all of our clients will get in SI sir, however, 90% make it to the pages of Field and Stream."

"Field and Stream huh? I was kind of hoping for the sports section of Teen Magazine or something?"

"We'll see what we can do Mr. Doe. Mr. Bartelstein will see you in his office here in Chicago on the 17th of October, 1992. Good day Mr. Doe."

"WAIT! Did you say 1992?!"

"Yes sir, we're booked. We still have some two-hundred bench

McNally's charges reduced to violations

By John Shore
Staff Writer

Keene State College Student Body President, Don McNally, who was convicted of two misdemeanors, is now facing only violation charges.

McNally was convicted of simple assault and shoplifting, which were both classified as misdemeanors, on September 28 in Keene District Court. According to Peter Heed, McNally's lawyer, an appeal was filed immediately in Cheshire County Superior Court.

According to Superior Court documents, McNally is still being charged with simple assault and shoplifting but the degree of the charges has been lowered to a violation. Prosecuting Attorney William Albrecht would not comment on why the charges were lowered because, he said, the case is still pending in court.

McNally said it's not fair for people to pass judgment until his appeal has ended. "I wish everyone including the press could have waited until the court process was complete," he said.

Julianne Planchet is one of three people who are circulating a petition to recall McNally. She said the lowered charges will not have an effect on their petition. "Even people who disagree with the petition have signed it because students deserve the chance to vote again," Planchet said. "We're focusing mainly on the shoplifting charge because it's a more black-and-white area," Planchet said. "He is setting a bad example for students. He is supposed to be a role model."

McNally said the people who are circulating the petition "should go back and say, 'Here are the new charges against him, do you still want to sign?'"

When asked who would win if there was another election, McNally said, "Let the best person win."

Leinster named Teacher of the Year

(College Relations)-The students' interest in books and literature and writing is what makes teaching worthwhile and exciting for David Leinster. His contact with people and their ideas makes him look forward, even anxious, to return to school each fall, he said. David Leinster, associate professor of history, has been named Keene State College's 1990-91 Distinguished Teacher of the Year. And it was his love of and dedication to teaching that enabled him to receive the honor.

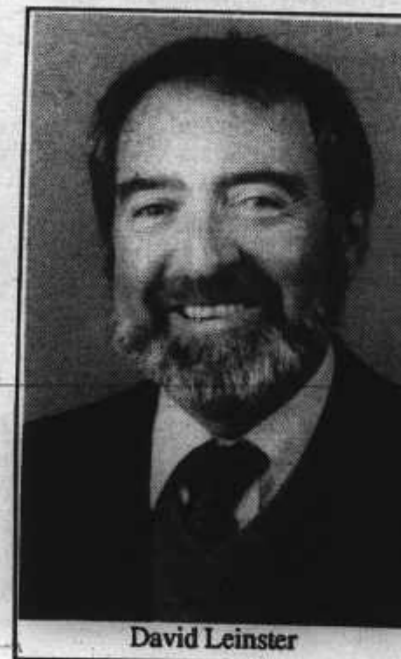

The Award, presented by the Keene State College Alumni Association, recognizes excellence in classroom teaching, encouragement of independent thinking, rapport with students outside the classroom, and effective student advisement.

Leinster has been active in many areas since his arrival at Keene State in 1966. He was instrumental in bringing the Travelli Scholarship program to KSC. Keene State is the only public college in New Hampshire to receive financial support from the prestigious Travelli Foundation. Leinster serves as mentor/adviser to students who receive this scholarship.

Leinster has been the coordinator of the Keene State history/philosophy department since 1986. He has served on the Putnam

The different lives of "Bobcat"

By Scott McPherson
Executive Editor

Ten years ago, Bob Goldthwait decided he had enough.

He was on stage and decided to stop trying to look like he was comfortable. He was nervous performing in front of crowds and he was going to show it.

Since then, "Bobcat" Goldthwait has been screaming and mumbling, using his own psychotic approach to make people laugh. And laugh they did, last Saturday night in the Spaulding Gymnasium when Goldthwait entertained a crowd of approximately 1,000 people for Homecoming Weekend.

He is still uncomfortable on stage, but he doesn't try to hide it anymore.

"I pretty much just stopped pretending I was comfortable up there," Goldthwait said. "I was just acting how I felt. It's not a very comfortable place to be. There are a lot of people looking at you and you're trying to be funny and trying not to preach too much."

The on-stage Goldthwait and the off-stage Goldthwait seem to be very different people.

On stage, he runs around similar to an outpatient at a mental hospital.

He grabs his hair, mumbles and occasionally screams.

Off-stage, he sits quietly on a bench back stage after the show. He is slumped and looks tired. He mumbles occasionally, and when he's speaking he looks you right in the eye. Not what you would expect from a man People Magazine called a cross between a Warner Brothers' cartoon and a nervous breakdown.

The son of a metal worker from Syracuse, New York, Goldthwait knew at age 13 that comedy was in his future. His big break came when he was 15 after he was thrown out of the punk-rock band "The Dead Ducks."

"I was really class-psycho. It wasn't like, really, comedy," he said.

Although he was still in high school, Goldthwait performed at local bars and clubs at night.

In 1980, Goldthwait formed a comedy troupe, "The Generic Comics," with fellow comedian Tom Kenny. Although Goldthwait still felt uncomfortable and nervous on stage, he wouldn't show it.

A year later, Goldthwait packed his bags and moved to Boston, hoping to become part of what he calls, the "city's bustling comedy community."

He changed his on-stage approach, acted like he felt and he was a hit. By age 20 he was able to support himself solely on his comedy. From there, his career took off.

Although he never attended college, Goldthwait was once a part of the "college experience."

For part of his 50-minute set at Keene, Goldthwait examined life in college.

"I lived illegally at Emerson University in Florida for an entire semester, I ended up there for a whole year actually," he said. "It was like going to college but I didn't have to do any work."

Goldthwait first became recognized, primarily through his on-stage personality, when he appeared in "Police Academy II." He played Zed, the slightly demented biker-turned-police-cadet.

In addition to the "Police Academy" sequels, Goldthwait has appeared in five other movies including "Scrooged," "Burglar" and "Tapeheads."

Despite having completed the eight movies and three cable comedy specials, Goldthwait said he prefers stand-up comedy.

"Movies are real slow," he said. "It's always boring because I was there when I did it."

Goldthwait said seeing the movie, sometimes a year after it was shot allows him to reflect on his work more than stand-up.

"I usually keep it to myself what I did wrong," he said.

Goldthwait is very critical of the films he has appeared in. He said he knows they have not all been terrific.

"I've gone on to appear in many other movies and television shows, some good and some stupid," he said. Goldthwait said he looks at some movies and sees what he would like to do.

"I like the Marx Brothers a lot because they got to make movies that they wanted to make," he said. "That's pretty cool whenever you can achieve that."

Off-stage, Goldthwait seems very quiet and private.

Although he spoke about his two kids during his act, he said generally, he likes to keep them out of the public eye.

"I try not to talk about them on stage that much because whenever I see a comic talk about their kids they're usually really lousy parents," Goldthwait said. "I doubt Bill Cosby could even pick his own kids out of a police line-up."

Although he is sometimes compared to comics like Sam Kinison or the foul-mouthed Andrew Dice-Clay, Goldthwait is his own comedian. He resents Dice-Clay and other celebrities who thrive from abusing the public.

On stage and off, Goldthwait cut-down Dice-Clay—the comic who has prompted boycotts and protests.

"Dice-Clay has to be addressed because he is a pop phenomenon," he said. "If you critique people who are pop phenomena—like Dice Clay or Axl Rose—they'll attack you trying to get publicity."

Although Kinison and Goldthwait both wail, moan and scream, they are very different.

Without letting the audience know he is doing it, Goldthwait sprinkles his act with a moral message. He defended first amendment rights for everyone, chastised the Cincinnati, Ohio, City Council for prosecuting the Mapplethorpe obscenity case, and made fun of gay-bashers—"I'd like to help you out but I can't come out of the closet."

Goldthwait said visiting Keene State "was an experience." Before the show, he and fellow comedian Tony V., who opened for Goldthwait, got lost.

"Speak to the human road map," Goldthwait said, pointing to Tony V.

"We got chewed out by a student. It was pretty funny," Goldthwait said. "You are late for the show," he said.

The Kronicle regroups and seeks new style

By Jennifer Layburn
Staff Writer

After years of financial burdens, The Kronicle is making a comeback with a new budget and format: The new Kronicle staff is planning a more unique style to represent the class of 1991.

The Kronicle is being offered for academic credit this semester as "Publication Production."

The new advisor is Brenda Amadon, a graphic designer who was hired as an adjunct last year by the Academic Affairs Office. Because the usual advisers had full schedules, someone was needed to orchestrate the class, said former advisor Richard Foley, IET professor at Keene State. Amadon is a former Kronicle photography editor, therefore she knows how yearbook production operates, Foley said.

In past years, The Kronicle had accumulated a $4-6,000 deficit. Foley said the debt was finally paid last year after at least four years in the red. The new budget is $20,000, up from $12,000, he said. While a $20,000 budget allocated by Student Assembly is reasonable, Foley said, "we are putting the book together on a shoestring."

The biggest cost in publishing the yearbook is printing, he said. Yearbooks are sold for approximately $25 each. At least $15-18 covers the cost of printing each book.

During harder times The Kronicle survived with a four-person staff. Foley said a larger staff, ranging ideally between 20-40 students would allow more freedom and flexibility. Strong advertising would better enhance the publication, he said.

While the $20,000 budget covers printing costs, Foley said it does not allow for extras. Color photographs are limited to the first 16 pages only, due to expenses, he said. Advertising and its additional revenue for the yearbook would allow for "spot color" scattered throughout instead of simply situated in the front.

Two years ago, The Kronicle offices were relocated from Elliot Hall to Butterfield Hall. The staff now has access to the graphic art labs, 13 Macintosh computers and a darkroom in Butterfield. Production is now done on computers instead of manual paste-up of blue prints, said Foley.

Executive Editor Matthew Gorby is looking at a new format for The Kronicle, something unique representing the class of 1991. Mountain bikes, fashion and language are hot items right now, but Gorby would also like to show current events of the time, he said, something more progressive.

Another way to change the format is to incorporate more text, Foley said. Therefore, the language of the time is retained through the years. Foley wants freelance work, like an editorial. The year is frozen in time not only by photos, he explained, but also through text.

Gorby said the most crucial step in starting The Kronicle this semester is taking photographs. "Know what to look for in a shoot, not just walk up and down Appian Way and take pictures of your friends," he said.

Whereas The Kronicle has a financial resource constraint, Foley said it is up to student creativity on where it will go. "It's really a team situation," he said. "It's an open-ended problem-solving exercise...we don't know what the solutions are." Despite previous problems, Foley said, "right now this organization should be in a position to have some fun."

Fulbright Scholar involved in multiculturalism

By Karen Dicey
News Editor

"I view school as an important social site. What happens there in preparing a person to be a citizen or a member of the human race is very important," Mary Kalantzis said.

Kalantzis, the Fulbright Scholar-In-Residence from the University of Wollongong, Australia, will be at Keene State throughout the academic year.

Although she has been on campus for only three weeks, Kalantzis has learned a lot about the United States and its culture.

A senior research fellow at the Centre for Multicultural Studies, a part of the university, Kalantzis never envisioned herself as a Fulbright Scholar.

When she was first approached to apply for the scholar-in-residence position she thought to herself, "America's so far away... It might be interesting to see if some of the things we're doing in Australia have any currency in another part of the world."

"I didn't think I'd get it but before I knew it, I was being interviewed," she said.

The Centre for Multicultural Studies was established approximately ten years ago, she said, and was one of the first institutions in Australia to examine how the immigration policy was affecting other areas of life, including the labor market, health and welfare, and education.

The center is involved in research for government departments, a post-graduate program at the university, as well as guest teaching in the undergraduate program.

"It's quite an important center," she said. "Its research has a direct effect on federal policy. It's a very exciting place... it's always on the edge, the political edge of what's happening in the country."

The Social Literacy Project is one of the curriculum development projects Kalantzis has been involved in at the Centre. "In the past, multiculturalism was about minorities or ethnic groups," she said. "It's about being literate in a society. Everybody's got to live with a diversity, not just those of a minority background."

"We looked at the social sciences at the primary and secondary levels and wrote materials that enabled children to understand how they became different—each one of them," she said. "Everyone was different to each other and you had to understand the process by which you became different."

Exchange program offers practical information

By Mark Nicholson
Assistant News Editor

Students for International Education and Exchange (SIEE) is a group of local and international students at Keene State who share an interest in studying abroad.

According to the organization's constitution, SIEE is a group which "provides pertinent information and practical assistance to students wishing to study abroad." SIEE

President Bill Manley said in addition to this, the group acts as a basis for interaction between local and international students and provides the international students with an inlet to their host communities.

Vice President of SIEE, Denise Borovy, said the group has many events planned, including trips to New York City, Boston, and Washington, D.C.

This year the executive board of SIEE is made up of students who have been to France, England and Australia. The general membership includes students from Japan, Ireland, England, Wales, Spain, and Kenya.

Manley said membership is open to all students and he encourages those who are interested to attend the meetings which take place Monday evening at 9:30 in the commuter lounge A, second floor of the Student Union.

New recruiters added to admissions staff

By Christine Cortese
Staff Writer

Keene State College will see some new faces next semester and next fall. A lot of the credit goes to Keene State's three new admissions recruiters.

Liz Acerno, Lori Farina and Terry Dimick have been hired by the admissions office for a temporary 10-month term in which they will travel state to state talking to prospective Keene State students.

Acerno is a 1990 Keene State graduate with a degree in management. She worked in the admissions office for four years as a tour guide and office assistant. Acerno will be recruiting students from the seacoast area of New Hampshire in addition to New Jersey and Connecticut.

Farina is a graduate of the University of New Hampshire and is a native of Keene. Farina will recruit students from Maine, Connecticut and parts of New York.

Dimick is a Plymouth State College graduate and is currently working on his master's degree. Dimick recruits students from northern New Hampshire and Eastern Massachusetts, including Boston and Cape Cod.

Acerno and Farina said they love their jobs and hope to continue after the new director of admissions is appointed.

Both Acerno and Farina have a similar way of recruiting students; they simply talk to students and parents who want to know more about Keene State.

"Most students ask about the education program at Keene State," said Farina. "Most of the parents ask about the drinking."

"Parents are very aware of Vision 2000," Acerno said. "They ask about the program."

"Keene State is very easy to promote," Farina said. "The administration is very upbeat and Keene State is on the up and up."

Farina, Acerno and Dimick will be on the road until mid-December traveling to schools to recruit students.

Once the applications arrive at the admissions office, Farina, Acerno and Dimick will review them and give their recommendations to administration. If there are transcript problems or if the student is a transfer, he or she will be interviewed by one of the three.

"The interview is a chance for the student to find out about Keene State," Acerno said. "If there is a problem in the transcript we ask them why."

"Usually some students don't test well. They can usually do better in the interview," Farina said.

According to both Farina and Acerno, one reason Keene State is such a good school is its location.

"Location is probably the number one factor in Keene State as a choice," Farina said. "If people could see what we have here we would be number one."

Acerno said Keene has a high quality of education and student life. "I am really excited because Keene State is very promotable right now," she said. "If you're lucky you can get into admissions."

report. The standards include mission and objectives, faculty, student services, programs and instruction, publications and advertising, special activities, physical facilities, financial resources, ethical practices, library and learning resources, organization and governance, and evaluation and planning. Each chapter contains a description and appraisal of each area in addition to a projection for future improvements.

Waling said the evaluators are responsible for validating the self-study, and assessing the college in terms of the 12 standards. Waling said all schools in the University System of New Hampshire (USNH) are accredited by the NEASC.

Moir Wild, a student on the Steering Committee, said students will be able to speak with members of the evaluation team. An open forum between evaluators and members of the campus community will be held Monday, Nov. 5 from 4 to 5 p.m.

Wild said NEASC accreditation is an "acknowledgement of quality from other members of the academic community. We are not in any danger of losing our accreditation because since 1980 there have been a lot of improvements and changes in all areas.

"The team will give us feedback on problems that they do see in the school and in turn we'll have to work on those for the next accreditation [in 2000]," she said.

"We know we're not perfect," Stumick said. "We know we have things to work on but we're looking forward to the visit." Stumick said the chairperson of the accreditation team conducted a preliminary interview in June and "was very positive." Stumick said she feels confident Keene State will be reaccredited.

Wild said copies of the self-study will be available to all members of the campus community. "If students really want to learn about how the college is functioning, what's really going on, this is a tremendous opportunity for them to learn about the school," she said. "It is a portrait of the college as it is now."

Student safety should always come first

I was very dismayed by last week's commentary against the new 24 hour lock-up policy. Security is a major issue on this campus and I think any protective measure is a good one. There are many advantages to having the doors on campus locked.

First, it does decrease the amounts of theft. If I remember correctly, The Equinox recently printed an article about how thefts are down this year compared to previous years. It is unrealistic to assume humans have instantly become more virtuous. Perhaps locking the doors has had an effect in this area. No, a locked door will not keep a determined person out, but must we give everyone an open invitation?

Second, a significant amount of damage and vandalism is done by people who do not live in the building. However, the students who live in that area are the ones who, more often than not, pay for that damage. Keeping the doors locked helps to monitor who is in the building so that what damage is done can more easily be traced to the people responsible.

Third, it gives people a greater feeling of security. Imagine allowing people to just walk in the front door of your parents' house. It is scary to feel that anyone can walk around in the place where I live, keep my personal belongings, etc. Locked doors help abate that insecurity.

I understand that it can be slightly annoying to call before going to visit, but is it really all that hard? Also, I'm confused as to whether or not the author of last week's commentary wanted students to ask questions of people entering buildings. First he was dissatisfied that people are let in with no questions asked. Yet, in the next paragraph, he considered it an inconvenience to answer to the person who opened the door for him. THANK YOU to all the people who took pride enough in their community to ask a few questions and ensure a safer environment for themselves and their neighbors.

Security has an officer that patrols only the residence halls. RA's do the best they can. Expecting them to know everything that goes on in an entire building is unfair. It will be helpful to have statistics to examine and compare, however we can't wait, and whatever the college or we as individuals do is essential to the safety on this campus.

gathered by April 1989, a forcible rape occurs every SIX MINUTES, while an aggravated assault occurs every 37 SECONDS!

Society for too long now has sat back and watched each generation become worse. It is time for that to change! Let's put it this way: Life is the greatest thing we have to offer, yet I personally would not have a child in today's world. When I get older, I would love to have a couple of children, but not if they had to go through what I did!

My next attack goes out to all those who have control of things here at Keene State College (you know who you are). Thursday evening (Oct. 4) the power at Keene State went out, all over the place. I went around campus to notice that EVERY blue light on the security phones was out. What good are phones if we can't see them? Maybe we could hook them up some way to a back-up generator. As for all you people who walked through the unlit areas of campus; what are you, nuts? Because it is raining out, or the power is out doesn't mean that all the sick people aren't out. You are at more of a risk during these times!

Security on campus needs to be improved as everyone is aware. We are a little late in our reaction concerning those attacked before. It is not the security team's fault, they are doing a great job. It is the fault of those on campus with power. I'm just as guilty if I just sit back here and watch. I am here to serve students. I owe it to them to make the KSC community the best it can possibly be.

KSC would like to believe that we have one happy community. We do not. The campus does not have enough housing for all students. At the beginning of the fall semester I was fifty-third on the Freshmen waiting list. That is only half of the problem. Most students on campus do not feel part of the community, because they are not well informed about ongoing events at KSC.

Vision 2000 is very much a possibility. It is going to take a great amount of sweat and a greater amount of money! I'm sure that whoever is footing the bill will surely agree that this is a small price to pay for the money they'll make in the future. The town of Keene should be bursting with business by then.

Yet, Vision 2000 will not have the opportunity to become reality if the city of Keene folds. This should be self-evident when the local McDonald's is hiring at $4.00/hr. compared to $5.50 in Rhode Island. Vision 2000 is gearing to make KSC the public college of choice in New England, we will not obtain this goal if there is no room for these students who will choose KSC over their hometown college.

McNally brings a negative image to Keene State by remaining in office

It is the goal of KSC to be the undergraduate school of choice by the year 2000. Still the college allows Student Body President Don McNally who was found guilty of both simple assault and shoplifting to remain in office. By allowing him to remain in office, this college is condoning the invasion of a woman's boundaries and shoplifting. This is not the kind of image that we, the student body of Keene State College would like to be associated with during its quest for VISION 2000.

Keene State claims it has strict policies on underage drinking yet Don McNally, in a meeting alone with the Freshman class, claimed that out of all the people who illegally drink at Keene State only ten percent will get caught. He even offered suggestions on how one could get away with under-age drinking.

If we allow people like Don McNally to hold an office here at Keene State then we are not choosing the correct path, unless of course we would like to be associated with a negative image. If we allow him to remain in office we condone under-age drinking, shoplifting and lack of respect for the opposite sex.

ALAN R. LABRIE

Welcome sheet for Russians was taken the wrong way

Given the rumors circulating concerning the sheet which I put up on the tennis court on the night of October 8th, it is evident that I must clarify the reason for its existence. It was not written in Greek, it did not call for the immediate impeachment of Don McNally, nor was it written in Satanic verse to summon the demons and ghouls of Hell to torment the administrators in Hale. It was simply an assign, written in Russian, welcoming the soccer team from Belgorod. Wake up folks; if WE keep sowing the seeds of confusion, we will ultimately reap it.

THE WORLD IN BRIEF

Compiled from the Associated Press
wire service.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev became the second Soviet to receive the Nobel Peace Prize this week. The Academy of Sciences, the organization which gives out the award, identified Gorbachev's achievements as nuclear arms reduction and improvement of relations between the East and West.

The first Soviet to win the award was Andre Sakharov, a nuclear scientist and social activist. Sakharov won the award in 1975.

The Democrats passed a deficit-cutting plan Tuesday night in the House of Representatives, despite a promise by President Bush to veto.

The plan increases taxes of all Americans, but substantially increases taxes on the wealthy. The budget debate will go to the Senate where there is another plan more to the liking of moderate Republicans.

Congress faces a deadline of Friday to synthesize a budget reduction plan.

The Middle East crisis continues without change despite hints of Saddam Hussein's willingness to make a deal.

Secretary of State James Baker yesterday, cited the memory of Nazi Germany as rationale not to accept a partial Iraqi pull-out of Kuwait. Baker said the world failed to stand up to aggression back then and must not let it happen again.

Four members of the fraternity Kappa Kappa Kappa dissolved their association with the fraternity last week according to The Dartmouth, the student newspaper of Dartmouth University. The action came after the fraternity failed to terminate the membership of former Dartmouth Review Editor In Chief, Kevin Princhett.

Princhett resigned his position at the Review after a quotation from Adolph Hitler's "Mein Kampf" appeared in the alternative newspaper's credo Yom Kippor eve.

A letter written by members of the fraternity said despite the fact Review staff members make up only a minority of the the fraternity, the house is often seen as a bastion for the Review.

The scandal surrounding the Review's actions has been the topic of television programs including 'Gerald' and '20/20,' and continues to be a catalyst for discussion around the country.

Some students wore jeans on campus at Dartmouth College to support gay and lesbian rights last Thursday, according to The Dartmouth. Thursday was National Coming Out Day and the Dartmouth Area Gay and Lesbian Organization (DAGLO) asked students to wear jeans to show support.

The DAGLO also sponsored a poetry reading and a dance to complete the day's events.

Commercial television divides school board

By Jennifer Layburn
Staff Writer

A proposal to air a commercial television program in local schools has the Keene School Board divided.

The program, Channel One, is a current events, political science program proposed by Whittle Communications, a media and publishing firm from Tennessee. The proposal would provide local schools with television equipment for every classroom. In return, the school must agree to broadcast Channel One every day. The 12-minute news program includes two minutes of commercials.

According to The Keene Sentinel, Whittle makes a profit by selling the advertisements, which cost approximately $150,000 per 30-second spot.

While some local educators support the proposal, others are against installing commercial television in the classroom. When the proposal was first discussed last spring, the Keene School Board felt rushed by Whittle's deadline. The board postponed the decision for further discussion, but the debate continues.

Superintendent of Schools, Phillip McCormack, supports the Channel One program. The Education Committee of the school board is discussing the proposal in an attempt to share ideas and get teachers reactions.

"We need to know if the teachers support it and how Channel One will make progress in the classroom,"

McCormack said. "The program is a good teaching tool if it has a positive impact on the kids," he said.

McCormack said Channel One would be aired at Keene High School during study hall periods only if the proposal is passed. It would not take away from regular class time, he said.

McCormack said he believes Channel One could help with geography skills and other high-order thinking skills. Channel One would offer a different teaching style for students with poor reading skills.

A student could watch Channel One, make comparisons and learn about plot development, McCormack said. It would not replace reading, he said, but could accomplish its goal of education through a different route other than by a traditional textbook.

The amount of critical discussion of the news program and commercial relationship concerns Tom Bassarear, assistant professor of education.

Bassarear said if Channel One is to be implemented in Keene, critical discussion of the commercial aspect, as well as the news, is essential.

News and commercials have a complex relationship and the students must understand so as not to be manipulated, he said. Bassarear said he is opposed to Channel One but can appreciate both sides of the argument.

McCormack said the situation is a "two-edged sword." However, if Channel One is used in proper context, students will not be manipulated. McCormack said every year schools collect Campbell Soup labels to help earn money for school supplies—including televisions. Campbell Soup or Whittle Communications in this case, are both subtle forms of manipulation but that is traditionally how supplies are obtained when school funding is low, he said.

Bassarear said Channel One may also manipulate students by supplying a slanted version of the news.

Bassarear cited the Public Service Company of New Hampshire which provides a service by sending material about nuclear energy to schools. This is factual information, he said, but it does not discuss controversial subjects and how nuclear energy can be harmful. Students will need to be aware of potential biases, he said.

While other high schools in the area, including Fall Mountain Regional, Newport and Manchester, have approved the Channel One proposal, they have yet to receive any of the equipment promised. According to The Keene Sentinel, Whittle said it has reached more than half its goal—8,000 schools nationwide.

The next meeting to discuss the proposal is scheduled in November, McCormack said.

education faculty at Keene State and will be teaching three seminars during the spring semester. She is also available to students and staff for discussion.

"I think what I want to say is greater than just in education," she said. "I don't just see it as schooling, I see it as an important experience in anybody's life, irrespective of where they're going to be. It's the only thing in life that's compulsory."

Kalantzis emphasized the need for balance between practical skills and literacy. She said teachers should prepare kids "not just for the philosophy about how to be tolerant and understanding, but bring them to the same level of proficiencies and skills so they can operate as equals."

"They [teachers] can't just philosophize and preach without giving kids the skills to succeed. You can't give them the skills to succeed without also preparing them for diversity. Not in a nation like ours. Not anywhere."

That theme of diversity can be seen throughout Keene State in events such as Diversity Day. Kalantzis said, "It's really commendable, the things that Keene has done... the Japanese filmmaker, the Russians... It's a small institution and it is making a real effort to reach out." But Kalantzis feels we still have a way to go.

"I think they've got their heart in the right place, but I don't think they really know what it [diversity] means," she said. "When you look at diversity as ethnic, aged, gay, disabled... When you start saying all that is part of diversity, you deny the challenge of cultural diversity."

"Once you say they're all of the same order, you minimize the challenge that another ethnic group really poses to the mainstream culture. That's the sense I get, that cultural diversity is that 'Everyone is different, but some differences are more different.' There are really significant challenges; the type of English you speak, how you relate to others.

Teaching diversity is not something that comes easy, Kalantzis said. "There were expectations on teachers to produce a multi-cultural curriculum but they didn't know how to, they hadn't been trained to. We thought we'd educate the educator through producing model curriculum materials. We don't use textbooks because every class is different, the teacher has to negotiate the curriculum."

She said in Australia there exists a centralized school system with a framework set by the government for each discipline. Educators, not politicians, she said, within a government department formulate the syllabi at a state level.

To graduate from grade 12, Australians must get a high school certificate by passing a state exam.

"You have them in literacy and numeracy only [SAT's], but we have state exams across all subject areas, history, English... whatever your subject choice," Kalantzis said.

While only approximately 12 percent of those with the certificate go on to a university, Kalantzis said, approximately 30 percent of the graduates go on to technical/vocational schools.

The vocational education lends itself well to the way Australians see themselves.

"We see ourselves as a country of wool and sheep growers. We export commodities which come from the ground [minerals]," she said. "We import all our high-tech. We have an immigration program that provides us with skilled people so our education system is geared to that kind of economy. We used to call ourselves a 'lucky country' because of that, but now there's a pressure to become a 'clever country'."

Kalantzis' educational background includes a bachelor's degree in history and linguistics and a doctorate in history from Macquarie University.

"In my undergraduate years I did American and Russian history because I thought they were the two most powerful areas of the world and if you didn't know their history, you didn't know the kind of influences they had on your life," said Kalantzis.

"My passion is history, but I knew that I would not succeed in history unless I mastered language," she said. "I did a double major in history and linguistics. I got first class honors in history—I wouldn't have gotten that unless I mastered the language. If you don't pay attention in language you can't succeed in any other subject areas."

"I think your command of language is going to make a big difference to the power you have over your own life," she said.

Kalantzis knows this from first-hand experience. She was born in Greece but moved to Australia at the age of three-and-a-half when her parents migrated. She speaks Greek with English as her second language.

One of her first impressions of Keene State occurred shortly after she arrived on campus.

"The other day, I saw this man wearing a t-shirt which said, 'Greek Week' and I thought 'Oh, what a fantastic shirt.' So I asked him where he got it and he said, 'You can't get them anymore.' This girl said, 'You can't wear them unless you're Greek.' And I said, 'I can wear it!'"

Another observation she made is that Australia and the U.S. have similar types of food, television, and language. "Because everybody speaks English, I think I'm going to sort of turn the next corner and end up at home."

But, she said, there is a kind of subtle psychological difference. America, she said, has a "strong sense of self."

"There is a sense that we're not a nation to ourselves in the same way that Americans feel," she said. "We don't worry if people tax us. We have enormous taxes. We pay twice the petrol [gas] price you pay. There's a sense that, 'Oh, that's the way it is.' There are people who govern us.

There's a sense that people will rule over us and we accept that. We're kind of laid back, we live our lives, let ourselves be governed."

Australia is governed by Great Britain and the Queen of England. There is a Governor General in Australia, who is 'the Queen's man,' she said.

"I've noticed, and this is only a small thing, that 'Fergie' is the American royal whereas in Australia, it's the Queen, the Queen Mother and her heir, Charles—they're the three, whereas you've chosen the lesser one," she said laughing.

Kalantzis is looking forward to learning and observing more about the U.S. during her stay, but of her overall impression she said, "It's too soon to say. I've only been here three weeks... you do have bigger supermarkets, though."

Community service is a major part of greek life

By Jennifer Layburn
Staff Writer

Each year the greek community of Keene State College strives to generate and maintain community service activities. Each organization has a philanthropy committee. The American Heritage Dictionary defines philanthropy as "the effort to increase the well-being of mankind, as by charitable donations." This is what community service is all about.

Activities range from working with chemically dependent teenagers at Country Acres, to ushering at church events. It is all very diverse, said Brendan Stevens of Sigma Lambda Chi, they're not just sponsoring blood drives and campus clean-ups.

An important aspect of the Greek Observatory Council (G.O.C.) is a separate committee on community service, said G.O.C. President Hans Fiedler of Phi Mu Delta. The main concentration of the G.O.C. is the student escort service. He said the idea is to implement more manpower. The Observatory Council was organized to raise community awareness of the greek community, he said, and act as a governing body over greeks. The G.O.C. has developed a community hotline which will give Keene residents living near greek houses the option to call the council about problems such as noise, Fiedler explained.

A separate council, the Greek Presidents Council (G.P.C.), gives all the presidents of greek organizations a chance to discuss issues dealing with greeks, said G.P.C. President Steve Marsden of Alpha Pi Tau. "Between G.O.C. and G.P.C.," said Marsden, "there's going to be a lot of coordinating going on between the greeks."

G.P.C. is basically an intermediary between the KSC administration and the greek community, Marsden said.

On an individual scale, community service is imperative for the survival of the organizations. "It must be understood that, in the majority of constitutions and bi-laws, that community service is the underlying factor of each organization in order for them to exist. That must be upheld,"

Fiedler said. He said, on average, each organization contributes about 200-250 hours of community service that is not documented, in addition to mandatory hours.

NOTICE

For Pro-Life Students

On Saturday, October 27th, at 10am, a Life-Chain of KSC students will be formed in the square and on the sidewalks south of the square in full view of free flowing traffic. A police permit will be obtained. Each student link will hold "An Abortion Takes A Life" sign.

If you wish to be a part of this event, sign up at The Newman Center no later than Saturday, October 20th so that the printer can make signs for the linkup. Your signs will be at the Center on the day of the demonstration.

Homecoming shines despite rain

By Jeff Becker
Staff Writer

Despite the rain, Keene State College's Homecoming Weekend events continued as planned.

The sky above Keene State's athletic stadium was filled with color Friday night as the college presented a fireworks display. Students expressed mixed opinions ranging from "nice" to "pretty lame."

The Homecoming king and queen were crowned at the Savage Brothers dance Friday night. Hans Fiedler and Julie Jaworski received the honors.

Saturday's Homecoming parade featured floats incorporating the theme of "Journey Into Imagination." "The little engine that could," "Willy Wonka," and "The old woman in the shoe" were just a few that ventured down Main Street.

Some students expressed disappointment with the short length of the parade. Keene State sophomore, Elizabeth Metzger, said, "It [the parade] was cute. There were hardly any floats, though."

For many, the highlight of the weekend was comedian "Bobcat" Goldthwait who performed Saturday night in Spaulding Gymnasium. Social Activities Council member, Tara Martinez said the gym was "packed" during the show.

To finish off the weekend the Keene State men's soccer team faced the Belgorod State soccer club Sunday afternoon. The Soviet team included visiting professor, Valentin Doborovich, but came up short, falling to Keene State, 4-1.

Patsies wield six shooter as show of strength

Out of Bounds
By Nelson Perras

The Pats had a pretty quiet, and successful week. Their record stood at 1 and 4, and considering their tailspin of late, that is a feat in and of itself. It also helps that the Patsies had the week off. They are getting tuned up for tomorrow's game against Miami. Veteran quarterback Steve Grogan looks like he's healthy enough to play—this will put ex-Raider Marc Wilson back on the bench where he belongs.

Patsie wide receivers Irving Fryar and Hart Lee Dykes had an interesting week—both were arrested outside the Club Shalimar in Providence. It appears that some irate fan (are there any left?) picked a fight with Dykes when he found out he was a football player. Dykes was on the losing end of the fight when Fryar decided to do his John Wayne impression and start waving a gun at everyone. The guy who beat up Dykes probably isn't a real fan—first of all, he would have realized that wide receivers don't know how to fight, that's why Fryar was carrying the gun. The second thing that would have come to mind is that Dykes plays for New England—and they haven't been able to fight their way out of a paper bag this season.

The Boston Celtics opened training camp this week and noticeably absent was veteran guard Dennis Johnson, who was released by Boston last week. While DJ's skills have eroded tremendously over the past two seasons, his leadership and past performances will long be remembered. Let's hope the "green" do the honorable thing and retire DJ's number and hang it from the rafters of the Garden.

Anyone have any predictions on how the Celts will finish this year? Even though they played poorly in the playoffs last year, they did win 52 games. The backcourt has definitely improved from last year—how could it not? This is Larry Bird's biggest year. We will see if he is fully recovered from last year's injury. Robert Parish is a year older and Kevin McHale is not getting any younger. Reggie Lewis is a fine young player and all coach Chris Ford needs to do is find a place to play him at. But don't get too optimistic. Age and lack of depth will catch up to the Celts by playoff time.

The match-up in the World Series appears to be an entertaining one. Lou Pinella's Cincinnati Reds are a good all-around club. The pitching staff, led by Jose Rijo and Randy Myers, is a strong one. The Reds also have a solid offense led by Eric Davis, Barry Larkin and Chris Sabo. Their opponents, the Oakland Athletics, are just about unbeatable. Dave Stewart and Bob Welch lead an outstanding rotation. This goes along with a bullpen that goes five men deep, led by Dennis Eckersley.

The A's offense is probably better than their pitching, if that's possible. Rickey Henderson is a legitimate MVP candidate. Jose Canseco and Mark McGwire provide some pretty impressive power numbers. Dave Henderson, Willie McGee and Harold Baines round out a well-balanced attack. The A's should win the series in six games—they're the best team I've ever seen. Besides, it has been a bad year for anything red—just ask any eastern European Communist.

This week's trivia question: How did the Boston Celtics acquire Dennis Johnson?

Last week's answer: The Pirates, Reds, Red Sox and A's were last in the playoffs together in 1975. The Reds beat the Sox in the series 4 games to 3.

Frisbee club breezes through Sectionals 3-1

By Joe Fallon
Sports Editor

The ultimate frisbee club will compete in the regionals this weekend at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The club blew through the sectionals last weekend at Brown University with a 3-1 record.

The club faced off against Ten Mile Radius first. Ten Mile Radius is a club team from Portsmouth, N.H. KSC won this match with score of 15-7. Next on the agenda was Worcester

Soccer Club beat the New Hampshire Alumni All-Star team 1-0 in a close game. Sergei Popov came up with the game-winning goal, which gave the Russians a big win.

Keene State came out ahead of St. Anselm College last Wednesday. Ricky Howard scored his first goal of the year off an assist by Nick Fiorentino seven minutes into the second half. Six minutes later Jim Prouty slammed a low shot from 25 yards out. With 11 minutes left in the game Sean Daly headed the ball into the back of the net. St. A's got the last goal of the game off a corner kick but KSC had already wrapped up the win. The final score was 3-1. Coach Butcher said the team played the best it played all year for the first 79 minutes but was disappointed with the last 11 minutes.

The men's soccer team plays tonight, under the lights at the athletic complex against the University of New Haven at 7 p.m. This weekend they play away at Sacred Heart University and Queens College.

Lady Owls lose: "We just never checked into the game"

By Julie Guenette
Staff Writer

The Lady Owls soccer team suffered their second defeat of the season in Saturday's game against Mercyhurst College. Despite the 1-0 loss, the Owls are still a top contender for the national championships with a 12-2-0 record.

Midfielder Alison Foley was forced to sit the game out because of injuries received in last Wednesday's game. Key player Philo Robinson joined Foley on the bench six minutes into the game with an injured knee, leaving the defense at a disadvantage. Coach Bert Poirier lamented the loss of his two players. "I'd rather lose 100 to 0 than lose Philo and Alison."

The Owls managed to keep Mercyhurst in check for the first half of the game and most of the second. Kathy Britton, substituting for Robinson, made an immediate impact on defense. Jen Sattler helped to fill Robinson's shoes as well by pulling together the Lady Owls' defense end. With six minutes left in the game, Mercyhurst defender Veronica Samson scored the game's only goal.

Poirier feels his team's heart was not into the game. "We just never checked into this game. It could have gone either way. I think Mercyhurst wanted it more than us."

The Lady Owls travel to Long Island this Friday to play Adelphi University.

Rain forces cancellation of some rec-sports outings

Last Tuesday proved to be an uplifting night for Team Murray as they beat Phi Mu Delta's "B" team in men's recreational volleyball. In the first of two matches, Team Murray won 15-10, and in the second match they earned a 15-6 victory.

"I feel the team's intensity is supreme," said Murray's player, Sam Kondrup. "We are an all freshman team, and we exploded when we beat the fraternity. The win was unexpected."

Phi Mu Delta's "A" team was more fortunate than the "B" team as they beat Sigma by a 14-point margin in the first match and an eight-point margin in the second.

Both of Phi Mu Delta's teams are doing very well in sportsmanship. "A" team captain Greg Lewis said, "There's some goofing around with the ref's, but they know it's all in fun. Both teams are competitive, but the "A" team is a little more so," he said. The Bad Boyz remain undefeated with their recent victory over Captain Lou's. The Boyz ended the first match with a six point win and the second with a five point win.

Compared to last year, "the team is doing very well. We have a great bunch of guys who play volleyball very good. Hopefully, we'll come out on top, unlike last year," said Bad Boyz captain Andy Hoffman.

The 8-Pack defeated Phi Kappa Theta, ending both matches with a score of 15-4. This win leaves the 8-Pack undefeated.

The AVP's beat Alpha ending the first match 15-13. In the second match, the AVP's held a five point lead to win 15-10.

The Internationals won by forfeit over the Extremes, as the undefeated Spike & Co., also won by forfeit over Alpha "B."

Recreational flag football and some softball games were cancelled this week due to rain. Players should check the recreational sports bulletin board in Spaulding Gymnasium to find out what times the make-up games are scheduled.

Men's soccer racks up four wins: Belgorod club goes 1-1

By Dave McAlpine
Staff Writer

The Keene State College men's soccer team swept four teams under the carpet in last week's action. The wins upped their record to 12 wins, two losses and one tie. Last Monday Keene State shut out Merrimack College 3-0, and then moved on to defeat Belgorod State 4-1 on Sunday. They began the week by ripping apart New York Tech 2-0 on Saturday and fighting off St. Anselm College 3-1 last Wednesday. The KSC men's soccer team is now ranked 14th in the country and 4th in New England.

The Owls rolled over Merrimack College on Monday winning 3-0. Five minutes into the first half, Bryan Plona scored off a cross from Steve Gallegos and put the Owls ahead 1-0. In the second half, Nick Fiorentino beat two Merrimack defenders and chipped the ball from the end line to Gallegos, who tangled the twine rounding the score at two. The final goal of the game was scored when Dave Gleason headed the ball into the net off a cross by Oswaldo Molina, leaving the final outcome 3-0.

Last Sunday was the big battle between East and West. There were two noticeable differences between the Belgorod State Soccer Club and the Keene State men's soccer team. Both had different playing styles and the European style of play usually does not allow for substitute players where as American teams are allowed substitutes. Owls coach Ron Butcher said, "I thought they were a bit tired on Sunday but they have some good players that are good with the ball at their feet. The Russians played a good game on Friday night and we didn't go after them that hard but we did what we had to do to win."

The first few minutes of the game were like those of a boxing match in which both opponents tried to figure out each other's strengths and weaknesses. The Owls came out as the aggressors and dominated the first half. Sean Daly scored the first goal. Shortly after, Nick Fiorentino hammered his first goal of the game, bringing the score up two to nil. KSC continued to contain the Russians in their own end for most of the second half and left Belgorod State in a defensive posture.

At the beginning of the second half a KSC defender slide tackled Sergei Popov inside the goalie's box, which resulted in a penalty shot. Igor Rutsikoi (Coach) easily knocked the ball into the left hand corner of the net, tallying Belgorod's only goal.

Paul McStowe got his first goal of the season off a cross and poked it into the bottom right-hand corner of the net. This expanded Keene's lead to two. Belgorod didn't have the resources to substitute and they began to look a little tired.

McStowe nailed the door shut when he walked in all alone, burned the Belgorod defense and scored his second goal of the game, which brought the score to 4-1.

The rain storm did not stop the Owls from playing on Saturday against New York Tech. Coach Butcher said, "We played the game in a driving rainstorm; the ball was skipping and doing all sorts of strange things." The game started off well for the Owls. Steve Gallegos made a nice goal off the New York Tech goalie after a throw-in by Brian Plona from 30 yards out. Fabian Videla's long punt eluded the defense and Dave Gleason was there to score the final goal of the game. Butcher said, "Goal keepers normally don't get assists or goals very often so it's

The Athlete of the Week awards go Jen Guerrini of the Lady Owls soccer team, and Steve Gallegos of the men's soccer team.

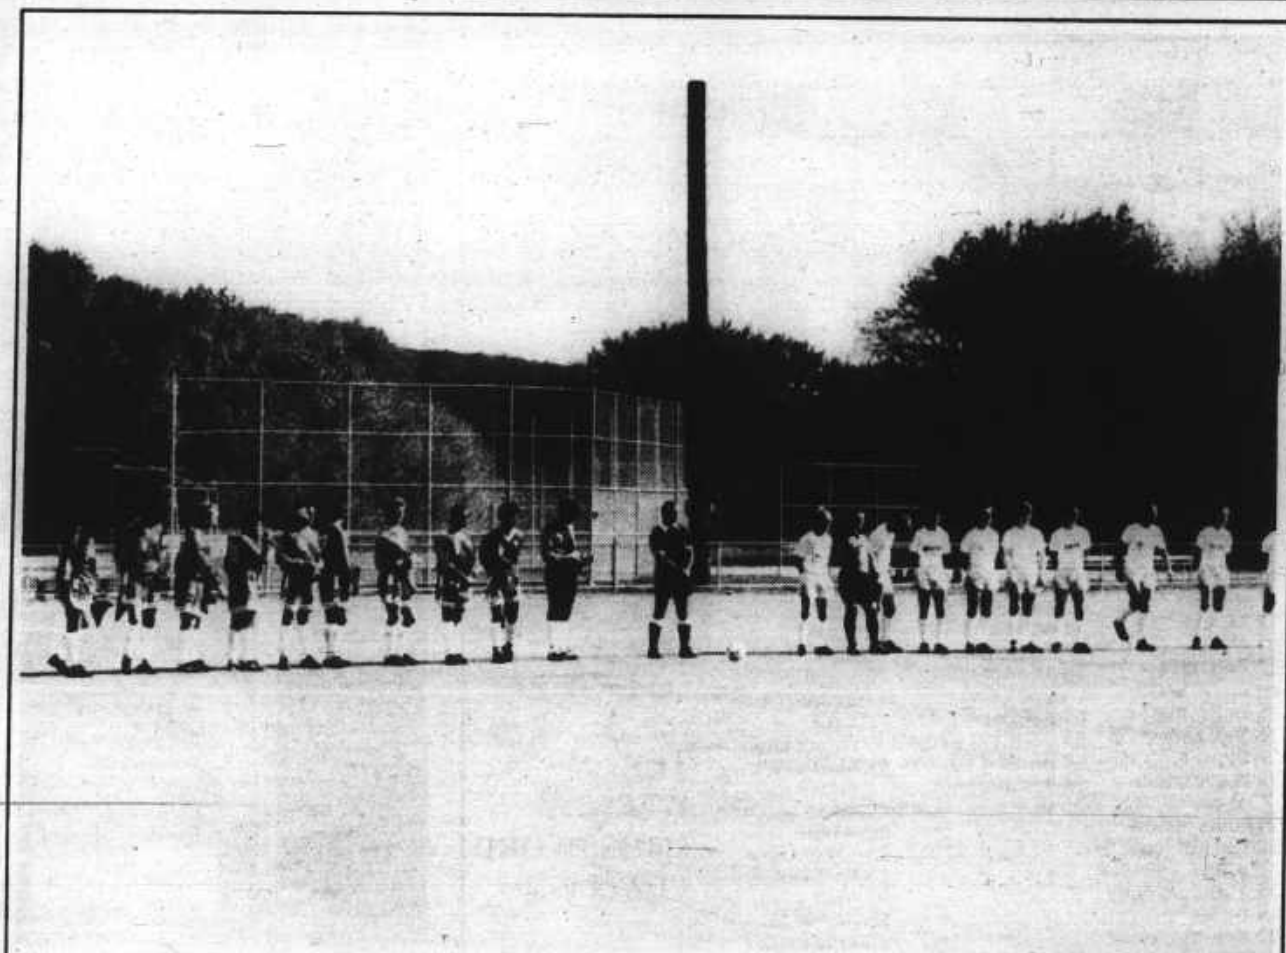

Guerrini scored the only goal of the game in Keene's victory over New Hampshire College last Wednesday. Guerrini's goal was a key one for the Lady Owls. The win kept Keene in first place, and left

Steve Gallegos

NHC in second-place.

Gallegos made a key assist and knocked in a goal to help lift the Owls over Merrimack College last Monday. In last Saturday's victory over New York Technical College, Gallegos grabbed a throw-in from two defenders and popped in the winning goal.

KSC Pub Club runs up a big tab

By Mark Nicholson
Assistant News Editor

The Keene State College Pub Club is approximately $7,000 in debt and is working to reduce the deficit, according to Paul Strifolino, director of the Student Union.

Kim Lauer, Pub Club adviser, said the debt is a result of poor communication among bookkeepers, the Pub Club Board of Directors, and the bartenders. Lauer said there were a number of "big bills" that were not paid which came as a shock to members of the Pub Club at the end of last semester.

"I think people who work there, they take in money and they get paid, and then there's a big black hole of where everything goes, and sometimes I don't think they can see beyond that point," Lauer said.

Strifolino said the account that the Pub has with the Student Union—which monitors all student organization's expenses—ran continuously "in the red" last year. Strifolino said that accounts for the deficit.

"They [The Pub] really just didn't have a good concept of what money was going out and what money was coming in," Strifolino said.

The Pub is paying off the deficit monthly to the Student Union, and should be "out of the red" in two to three years, Strifolino said. He plans to meet with Pub officials periodically to help establish more efficient business practices. "I really haven't been satisfied with their daily accounting," he said.

To reduce the deficit, the Pub plans to raise prices and has hired a business intern, Deborah Dodier, to help with the Officials investigate bacterial infection

Campus water and food to be tested

By Scott McPherson
Executive Editor

A water and food based bacterial infection has sent more than 50 Keene State College students to area medical facilities in the last three days.

According to Ron Paradis, director of college relations, the students were suffering from flu-like symptoms including diarrhea, vomiting, fever, dehydration and cramping.

A bacterial infection—Shigellosis—was found in samples taken from some of the students who were treated.

"We are not speculating on where it came from," Paradis said.

Speaking at last night's student assembly meeting, Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Delina Hickey said officials from the Keene Board of Health will be on campus today (Wednesday), investigating the illness.

Hickey said Bob Ford, director of Marriot food services, saved food refuse from the weekend so health officials can examine it.

"They are going to look at the food supply and go through and test that to see what they can find," Hickey said. "We don't know if it's in the water [or food]."

Ford was not available for comment last night.

Hickey said the health department will be looking for a common thread that will link the illnesses to something. She said they will be looking primarily at residence halls and dining areas. However, if it becomes apparent faculty members or others have become infected the investigation will be expanded.

New Main Street bookstore looks to end college monopoly

By Kathy Moran
Features Editor

A bookstore that will be in direct competition with the Keene State College bookstore will open on Main Street December 1, according to Lorraine Mechem, manager of the Durham Book Exchange.

Bill Zecker, owner of the Durham Book Exchange, has petitioned the Keene Planning Board for permission to open a Keene store. He owns similar bookstores at Plymouth State College and the University of New Hampshire.

According to Bill Parker, Keene's

assistant planning director, Zecker proposed to open the store in the former Kingsward School building, on the corner of Main and Marlborough Streets.

Parker said final approval will not be given by the Keene Planning Board until certain conditions are met. According to records at the Planning Department, the conditions include adding signs that reserve parking for employees, allowing only UPS-type delivery vehicles, widening the driveway, and moving a crosswalk near the driveway five feet
