

Saturday

Dear Bill,

For my disreputable stationery it should be interpreted as a signal proof of friendship - "one of my very best friends," you know. I'm not to find it until next month. It's produced almost a hundred pages this session, and if it isn't sick of itself, I am! I've stuck for metaphysics, however crazy.

So good to get your letter and to share your excitement about Michigan State. I'm really very happy for you. This is the kind of place I had hoped for. I hadn't thought of the modest, but it sounds better and better every week. And see a picture of healthy people with red cheeks and straight backs. The representative man in Cambridge is a would-be imitator of the man in the gray flannel skin, etc.

I have come a long way towards making my duties (Christian not Cartesian, I hasten to add). It involves a great deal more intellectual as well as moral discipline than I had imagined at the first blush of emotional reconversion. It is hard for the mind to find its house and use them not it must. I say this with the reluctant conviction that rationalization can be lured from its agnosticism by an act of will. Perhaps

Recept -

Once it started, I apparently can't stop. Hope it works this way when it comes to reviewing (the concept of the infinite process as a comfortable idea - my dear

Howard is in a hurry to both summarize and the year out for work. I went at a tea in Cambridge and we spent most of an evening talking this in.

I shall be thinking about things to me. I shall not lift my attention at the moment this fall a question to be settled later, at the disposition. I am a person it would be better for me to wait a year, but I am reconsidering. I may be much in need of a rest if I do it. I shall spend a few days with my mother in Illinois, and I shall certainly find my way to visit if you can spare the time for a visit.
A few weeks would be grand. I'll let you know more about this later.
